FOREWORD

This pamphlet contains the General Rules of Practice and Procedure so far adopted by the Court of Appeals, pursuant to Chapter 719 of the Acts of 1939, together with a series of Explanatory Notes.

These Rules were adopted by the Court and submitted to the Legislature on January 30, 1941. Since no changes were made in them by the Legislature, they will become effective on September 1, 1941.

The Rules adopted were part of those recommended to the Court by a standing Committee appointed by the Court on March 1, 1940, for this purpose. This Committee is composed of one member from each of the counties of the State and eight members from Baltimore City with Chief Judge Samuel K. Dennis of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City as Chairman. Mr. Robert R. Bowie was appointed by the Court to act as Reporter to the Committee.

To assist the Committee in its work the Reporter prepared a number of studies on various aspects of Maryland procedure. This pamphlet contains such of these studies as relate to the Rules adopted by the Court of Appeals with the necessary revisions to conform to the final form of the Rules.

These Explanatory Notes are not in any sense, of course, an official construction or interpretation of the Rules. They are merely intended to inform the Bench and Bar of the purposes, scope and functions of the various Rules and to aid in a better understanding of them.

EFFECTIVE SEPTEMBER 1, 1941

CITATION OF RULES

To facilitate future additions without renumbering, the Rules have been grouped and numbered by topics, such as Depositions, Discovery, and Trials. They may be conveniently cited by reference to the topic and the Rule number,—as, for example, “Deposition Rule 3”, “Discovery Rule 5”.

GENERAL RULES
OF

---

PART ONE.

GENERAL RULE

Except as modified or superseded by the following rules, all existing general and local statutes and rules of the Court of Appeals regulating practice and procedure in civil cases at law and in equity in courts of record in this State are hereby adopted as general rules of the Court of Appeals, pursuant to its powers under Section 35 of Article 26 of the Annotated Code of Maryland (1939 Edition). As used in this rule the terms "practice and procedure" shall include all matters and subjects on which the Court of Appeals is authorized to prescribe general rules by Section 35 of said Article 26.

PART TWO.

RULES APPLICABLE TO LAW AND EQUITY.

I. DEPOSITIONS.

Rule 1. Depositions Pending Proceedings.

At any time after jurisdiction has been obtained over any defendant or over property which is the subject of the proceeding, any party to any proceeding may, without leave of court, cause the testimony of any person, whether a party or not, to be taken by deposition upon oral examination or written interrogatories for the purpose of discovery or for use as evidence in the proceeding or for both purposes. The deposition of a person confined in prison may be taken only by leave of court on such terms as the court prescribes. The taking and use of such depositions shall be governed by Rules 3 to 12 inclusive.

Rule 2. Depositions Before Proceedings.

(a) Right to Take. A person who desires to perpetuate his own testimony or that of any other person regarding any matter in proving which he may apprehend himself to be interested may have his own or such person's deposition taken in this State in accordance with these rules. The notice required by Rule 5 shall be given to each person against whom such deposition is expected to be used. In applying the rules to such depositions the persons notified shall be deemed "parties" and references to the "court in which the proceeding is pending" shall be deemed to refer to any court of law or equity in this State within whose jurisdiction the depositions are to be taken.

(b) Minors and Incompetents. Where any person against whom such deposition is to be used is a minor or incompetent, notice may be given to his attorney or guardian or committee, or if he has none, any court of law or equity within whose jurisdiction the deposition is to be taken may appoint a guardian or attorney for that purpose upon motion by the person taking the deposition.

(c) Non-residents. When any person against whom such deposition is intended to be used is absent from the State and has no agent, attorney or guardian within the State, any court of law or equity within whose jurisdiction the deposition is to be taken may, upon motion by the person taking the deposition, authorize notice to such person by publication, registered mail or otherwise and may appoint an attorney to represent him at the examination.

Rule 3. Persons Before Whom Taken.

(a) Within This State. Within this State, depositions shall be taken before any standing commissioner or equity examiner or before any notary public of this State.

(b) In Other States. Within any other state of the United States or within a territory, district, or possession of the United States, depositions shall be taken before any officer authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the United States or of the place where the examination is held.

(c) In Foreign Countries. In a foreign state or country depositions shall be taken (1) on notice before a secretary of embassy or legation, consul general, consul, vice consul, or consular agent of the United States, or (2) before such person or officer as may be appointed by commission or under letters rogatory. A commission or letters rogatory shall be issued only when necessary or convenient, on application and notice, and on such terms and with such directions as are just and appropriate. Officers may be designated in notices or commissions either by name or descriptive title and letters rogatory may be addressed "To the Appropriate Judicial Authority in (here name the country)".

(d) Disqualification for Interest. No deposition shall be taken before a person who is a relative or employee or attorney or counsel of any of the parties, or is a relative or employee of such attorney or counsel, or is financially interested in the proceeding, unless the parties agree thereto.

Rule 4. Stipulations as to Taking of Depositions.

If the parties so stipulate in writing, depositions may be taken before any person, at any time or place, upon any notice, and in any manner and when so taken may be used like other depositions.

Rule 5. Notice to Take Depositions.

(a) Upon Oral Examination. A party desiring to take the deposition of any person upon oral examination shall give at least five days' notice in writing to every other party to the proceedings. The notice shall state the time and place for taking the deposition, the name or descriptive title of the officer before whom the deposition is to be taken, and the name and address of each person to be examined, or, if the name is not known, a general description sufficient to identify him or the particular class or group to which he belongs. On motion of any party upon whom the notice is served, the court may for cause shown enlarge or shorten the time.

(b) Upon Written Interrogatories. A party desiring to take the deposition of any person upon written interrogatories shall serve them upon every other party with a notice stating the name and address of the person who is to answer them and the name or descriptive title and address of the officer before whom the deposition is to be taken. Within 10 days thereafter a party so served may serve cross interrogatories upon the party proposing to take the deposition. Within 5 days thereafter the latter may serve redirect interrogatories upon a party who has served cross interrogatories. Within 3 days after being served with redirect interrogatories, a party may serve recross interrogatories upon the party proposing to take the deposition.

Rule 6. Orders to Protect Parties and Deponents.

(a) Power. After notice is served for taking a deposition by oral examination, or upon written interrogatories, upon motion seasonably made by any party or by the person to be examined and upon notice and for good cause shown, the court in which the proceeding is pending may make an order (1) that the deposition shall not be taken, or (2) that it may be taken only at some designated place other than that stated in the notice, or before some other designated officer, or (3) that it may be taken only on written interrogatories, or only by oral examination, as the case may be, or (4) that certain matters shall not be inquired into, or (5) that the scope of the examination shall be limited to certain matters, or (6) that the examination shall be held with no one present except the parties to the proceeding and their officers or counsel, or (7) that after being sealed the deposition shall be opened only by order of the court, or (8) that secret processes, developments or research need not be disclosed, or (9) that the parties shall simultaneously file specified documents or information enclosed in sealed envelopes to be opened as directed by the court; or the court may make any other order which justice requires to protect the party or witness from hardship or oppression.

(b) Limitations. The policy of these rules is to require full disclosure as specified in Discovery Rule 3 and the powers conferred by section (a) of this rule shall be used only to prevent genuine oppression or abuse.

(c) Expenses. If a motion under this rule is denied and if the court finds that the motion was made without substantial justification, the court shall require the moving party or witness or the attorney advising the motion or both of them to pay to the party taking the deposition the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred in opposing the motion, including reasonable attorney's fees. If, upon a motion under this rule, the court orders that the deposition shall not be taken and if it finds that the purpose in taking the deposition was to harass or oppress the witness or party, the court shall require the party attempting to take the deposition or the attorney advising such taking or both of them to pay to the moving party or witness the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred in obtaining the order, including reasonable attorney's fees.

Rule 7. Subpoenas; Place of Examination.

(a) Subpoena. Upon proof of service of a notice to take a deposition as provided in Rule 5, the clerk of any court of this State having jurisdiction over the place where the deposition is to be taken shall issue subpoenas for the persons named or described in the notice. A subpoena commanding the production of documentary evidence on the taking of a deposition shall not be issued without an order of the court.

(b) Place of Examination. A resident of this State may be required to attend an examination for deposition only in the county wherein he resides or is employed or transacts his business in person. A non-resident may be required to attend in this State only in the county wherein he is served with a subpoena or within forty (40) miles from the place of service or at such other place as is fixed by an order of the court.

(c) Out of State. Where the examination is held outside of this State, witnesses shall be compelled to attend and testify in accordance with the law of the place where the examination is held.

Rule 8. Conduct of Examination.

(a) Upon Oral Examination. When the deposition is taken upon oral examination, examination and cross-examination of the deponents may proceed as permitted at the trial. In lieu of participating in the oral examination, parties served with notice of taking a deposition may transmit written interrogatories to the officer who shall propound them to the witness and record the answers verbatim.

(b) Upon Written Interrogatories. When the deposition is to be taken upon written interrogatories, a copy of the notice and copies of all interrogatories served shall be delivered by the party taking the deposition to the officer designated in the notice, who shall proceed promptly in the manner provided by these rules to take the testimony of the witness in response to the interrogatories and to prepare, certify and file or mail the deposition, attaching thereto the copy of the notice and the interrogatories received by him.

(c) Record of Examination. The officer before whom the deposition is to be taken shall put the witness on oath and shall personally, or by some one acting under his direction and in his presence, record the testimony of the witness. The testimony shall be taken stenographically and shall be transcribed unless (1) the parties agree otherwise, or (2) the court in which the proceeding is pending, upon motion and for good cause shown, orders otherwise to save expense, or to prevent hardship or injustice. All objections made at the time of the examination to the qualifications of the officer taking the deposition, or to the manner of taking it, or to the evidence presented, or to the conduct of any party, and any other objection to the proceedings, shall be noted by the officer upon the deposition. Evidence objected to shall be taken subject to the objections.

(d) Refusal to Answer. If a party or other deponent refuses to answer any question propounded upon oral examination, the examination shall be completed on other matters or adjourned, as the proponent of the question may prefer. Thereafter, on reasonable notice to all persons affected thereby, he may apply to any court of law or equity within whose jurisdiction the deposition is taken for an order compelling an answer. Upon the refusal of a deponent to answer any written interrogatory the proponent of the question may on like notice make like application for such an order. If the motion is granted and if the court finds that the refusal was without substantial justification, the court shall require the refusing party or other deponent and the party or attorney advising the refusal or either of them to pay to the examining party the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred in obtaining the order, including reasonable attorney's fees. If the motion is denied and if the court finds that the motion was made without substantial justification, the court shall require the examining party or the attorney advising the motion or both of them to pay to the refusing party or witness the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred in opposing the motion, including reasonable attorney's fees.

Rule 9. Signing and Certification of Deposition.

(a) Signing. When the testimony is fully transcribed the deposition shall be submitted to the witness for examination and shall be read to or by him, unless such examination and reading are waived by the witness and by the parties. Any changes in form or substance which the witness desires to make shall be entered upon the deposition by the officer with a statement of the reasons given by the witness for making them. The deposition shall then be signed by the witness, unless the parties by stipulation waive the signing or the witness is ill or cannot be found or refuses to sign. If the deposition is not signed by the witness, the officer shall sign it and state on the record the fact of the waiver or of the illness or absence of the witness or the fact of the refusal to sign together with the reason, if any, given therefor; and the deposition may then be used as fully as though signed, unless on a motion to suppress under Rule 10 (d) the court holds that the reasons given for the refusal to sign require rejection of the deposition in whole or in part.

(b) Certification, Filing and Copies.

(1) The officer shall certify on the deposition that the witness was duly sworn by him and that the deposition is a true record of the testimony given by the witness. He shall then securely seal the deposition in an envelope endorsed with the title of the proceeding and marked "Deposition of (here insert name of witness)" and shall promptly file it with the court in which the proceeding is pending or send it by registered mail to the clerk thereof for filing.

(2) Upon payment of reasonable charges therefor, the officer shall furnish a copy of the deposition to any party or to the deponent.

(3) The party taking the deposition shall give prompt notice of its filing to all other parties.

Rule 10. Effect of Errors and Irregularities in Depositions.

(a) As to Notice. All errors and irregularities in the notice for taking a deposition are waived unless written objection is promptly served upon the party giving the notice.

(b) As to Disqualification of Officer. Objection to taking a deposition because of disqualification of the officer before whom it is to be taken is waived unless made before the taking of the deposition begins or as soon thereafter as the disqualification becomes known or could be discovered with reasonable diligence.

(c) As to Taking of Deposition.

(1) Objections to the competency of a witness or to the competency, relevancy, or materiality of testimony are not waived by failure to make them before or during the taking of the deposition, unless the ground of the objection is one which might have been obviated or removed if presented at that time.

(2) Errors and irregularities occurring at the oral examination in the manner of taking the deposition, in the form of the questions or answers, in the oath or affirmation, or in the conduct of parties and errors of any kind which might be obviated, removed, or cured if promptly presented, are waived unless seasonable objection thereto is made at the taking of the deposition.

(3) Objections to the form of written interrogatories submitted under Rule 5 are waived unless served in writing upon the party propounding them within the time allowed for serving the succeeding cross or other interrogatories and within 3 days after service of the last interrogatories authorized.

(d) As to Completion and Return of Deposition. Errors and irregularities in the manner in which the testimony is transcribed or the deposition is prepared, signed, certified, sealed, endorsed, transmitted, filed, or otherwise dealt with by the officer are waived unless a motion to suppress the deposition or some part thereof is made with reasonable promptness after such defect is, or with due diligence might have been, ascertained.

Rule 11. Use of Depositions.

(a) When to be Used. At the trial or upon the hearing of a motion or an interlocutory proceeding, any part or all of a deposition, so far as admissible under the rules of evidence, may be used in accordance with any one of the following provisions:

(1) Any deposition may be used by any party for the purpose of contradicting or impeaching the testimony of deponent as a witness.

(2) The deposition of a party or of any one who at the time of taking the deposition was an officer, director, or managing agent of a public or private corporation, partnership, or association which is a party may be used by an adverse party for any purpose.

(3) The deposition of a witness, whether or not a party, may be used by any party for any purpose against any other party who was present or represented at the taking of the deposition or who had due notice thereof, if the court finds: (i) that the witness is dead; or (ii) that the witness is out of the jurisdiction, unless it appears that the absence of the witness was procured by the party offering the deposition; or (iii) that the witness is unable to attend or testify because of age, sickness, infirmity, or imprisonment; or (iv) that the party offering the deposition has been unable to procure the attendance of the witness by subpoena; or (v) upon application and notice, that such exceptional circumstances exist as to make it desirable, in the interest of justice and with due regard to the importance of presenting the testimony of witnesses orally in open court, to allow the deposition to be used.

(4) If only part of a deposition is offered in evidence by a party, an adverse party may require him to introduce all of it which is relevant to the part introduced, and any party may introduce any other parts in accordance with this rule.

Substitution of parties does not affect the right to use depositions previously taken; and, when a proceeding in any court of this State or of any other state or of the United States has been dismissed and another proceeding involving the same subject matter is afterward brought between the same parties or their representatives or successors in interest, all depositions lawfully taken and duly filed in the former proceeding may be used in the latter as if originally taken therefor.

(b) Objections to Admissibility. Subject to the provisions of Rule 10, objection may be made at the trial or hearing to receiving in evidence any deposition or part thereof for any reason which would require the exclusion of the evidence if the witness were then present and testifying.

(c) Effect of Taking or Using Depositions. A party shall not be deemed to make a person his own witness for any purpose by taking his deposition. The introduction in evidence of the deposition or any part thereof for any purpose other than as permitted by paragraphs (1) and (2) of section (a) of this rule makes the deponent the witness of the party introducing the deposition. At the trial or hearing any party may rebut any relevant evidence contained in a deposition whether introduced by him or by any other party.

Rule 12. Penalties.

(a) Contempt. If a party or other witness refuses to be sworn or refuses to answer any question after being directed to do so by any court of law or equity within whose jurisdiction the deposition is being taken, the refusal may be considered a contempt of that court.

(b) Other Orders. If any party or any officer or managing agent of a party wilfully fails to appear before the officer who is to take his deposition after being served with the proper notice or refuses to answer any designated questions after an order of court to do so, the court in which the proceeding is pending may make any of the orders authorized by Discovery Rule 7.

(c) Failure to Attend. If the party giving the notice of the taking of a deposition on oral examination fails to attend and proceed therewith and another party attends in person or by attorney pursuant to the notice, the court may order the party giving the notice to pay to such other party the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred by him and his attorney in so attending, including reasonable attorney's fees.

(d) Failure to Subpoena Witness. If the party giving the notice of the taking of a deposition of a witness fails to serve a subpoena upon him and the witness because of such failure does not attend, and if another party attends in person or by attorney because he expects the deposition of that witness to be taken, the court may order the party giving the notice to pay to such other party the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred by him and his attorney in so attending, including reasonable attorney's fees.

Rule 13. Application and Effect on Existing Laws.

Rules 1 through 12 shall apply in all civil actions both in law and equity in all courts of record throughout the State. These Rules shall be the exclusive method for taking depositions in all cases to which they apply, and to that extent supersede the following statutes and rules:

(1) Sections 21 through 36 of Article 35 of the 1939 Code and all rules of court pursuant thereto, except the provisions of Section 24 as to appointment of standing commissioners, and Sections 25, 33 and 36;

(2) Section 44 of Article 17 of the 1939 Code;

(3) General Equity Rules 34 through 41, and 44 (Article 16, Sections 281 through 289 of the 1939 Code) and Sections 294 through 299 of Article 16 of the 1939 Code, and all rules of court pursuant thereto, insofar as such sections and rules apply to depositions de bene esse or for use in trials where testimony is taken in open court pursuant to Sections 290 and 291 of Article 16 of the 1939 Code. But Rules 1 through 12 shall not affect hearings before an examiner in equity pursuant to Rules 34 through 42 of the General Equity Rules (Article 16, Sections 281 through 288, and 293, 1939 Code) in substitution for taking testimony in open court, or hearings before auditors or masters.

II. DISCOVERY.

Rule 1. Discovery by Deposition.

Depositions may be taken for discovery in accordance with Deposition Rules 1 and 3 to 12 inclusive, and Discovery Rule 3.

Rule 2. Interrogatories to Parties.

(a) Delivery. Any party to any proceeding may at any time serve upon any adverse party written interrogatories to be answered by the party served or, if the party served is a public or private corporation or a partnership or association, by any officer thereof competent to testify in its behalf. No party may, without leave of court, serve upon the same party more than one set of interrogatories or more than thirty interrogatories (including interrogatories subsidiary or incidental to, or dependent upon other interrogatories, however grouped, combined or arranged) to be answered by him.

(b) Answers. Within fifteen days after the delivery of the interrogatories, unless the court, on motion and notice and for good cause shown, enlarges or shortens the time, the party upon whom the interrogatories have been served shall serve a copy of the answers on the party submitting the interrogatories. Each interrogatory shall be answered separately and fully in writing under oath or the grounds for refusal to answer shall be fully stated under oath. The answers shall be signed by the person making them.

(c) Exceptions. Within ten days after delivery of the answers, the party submitting the interrogatories may file exceptions to the sufficiency of any answer or to any refusal to answer, which shall be heard as soon as practicable. If an exception is sustained, the court shall order an answer or further answer within such time as it may prescribe and, if the court finds that the refusal or insufficient answer was without substantial justification, the court shall require the party or his attorney or both of them to pay to the party submitting the interrogatories the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred in obtaining the order, including reasonable attorney's fees. If the exception is denied and if the court finds that it was made without substantial justification, the court shall require the party submitting the interrogatories or his attorney or both of them to pay to the other party the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred in opposing the exceptions, including reasonable attorney's fees.

(d) Default. If, after proper service of interrogatories upon a party, he fails to serve answers to them within the time allowed, the court on motion and notice may strike out all or any part of any pleading of that party, or dismiss the action or proceeding or any part thereof, or enter a judgment by default against that party.

(e) Use of Answers. At the trial or at any interlocutory proceeding, all or any part of the answers of a party to interrogatories, so far as admissible under the rules of evidence, may be used as evidence against such party by the party submitting the interrogatories. If only a part of the party's answers is offered in evidence, he may require the introduction of all of the answers which are relevant to the part introduced.

Rule 3. Scope of Examination and Interrogatories.

Unless otherwise ordered by the court, a deponent may be examined pursuant to Rule 1, or interrogatories may be submitted to a party pursuant to Rule 2, regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending proceeding (1) whether relating to the claim or defense of the party examining or submitting interrogatories or to the claim or defense of any other party and (2) including the existence, description, nature, custody, condition and location of any books, documents or other tangible things and (3) including any information of the witness or party, however obtained, as to the identity and location of persons having knowledge of relevant facts and (4) whether or not any of such matters is already known to or otherwise obtainable by the party examining or submitting interrogatories.

Rule 4. Discovery of Documents and Property.

Upon motion of any party showing good cause therefor and upon notice to all other parties, the court may, at any time in any proceeding,

(1) order any party to produce and permit the inspection and copying or photographing, by or on behalf of the moving party, of any designated documents, papers, books, accounts, letters, photographs, objects, or tangible things, not privileged, which may constitute or contain evidence material to any matter involved in the proceeding and which are in his possession, custody, or control; or

(2) order any party to permit entry upon designated land or other property in his possession or control for the purpose of inspecting, measuring, surveying, or photographing the property or any designated relevant object or operation thereon; or

(3) order any samples to be taken, or any observations to be made or experiment to be tried, which may seem necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence as to any matter involved in the proceeding.

The order shall specify the time, place, and manner of making the inspection, observations or experiments and of taking the copies and photographs or samples and may prescribe such terms and conditions as are just.

Rule 5. Mental and Physical Examinations.

Whenever the mental or physical condition of a party is material to any matter involved in any proceeding, the court may, upon motion by any party and notice to all other parties, for good cause shown, order such party to submit to a mental or physical examination by a physician or physicians. The order (1) shall specify the time, place, manner, conditions and scope of the examination and the person or persons by whom it is to be made and (2) may regulate the filing of a report of findings and conclusions and the testimony at the trial by the examining physician or physicians, the payment of the expenses of the examination and any other relevant matters.

Rule 6. Admission of Facts and of Genuineness of Documents.

(a) Request. A party to any proceeding may at any time serve upon any other party a written request to admit (1) the genuineness of any relevant documents described in and exhibited with the request or (2) the truth of any relevant matters of fact set forth in the request. Copies of the documents shall be delivered with the request unless copies have already been furnished.

(b) Admission. Each of the matters of which an admission is requested shall be deemed admitted unless, within a period designated in the request, not less than ten days after service thereof or within such further time as the court may allow on motion and notice, the party to whom the request is directed serves upon the party requesting the admission a sworn statement either denying specifically the matters of which an admission is requested or setting forth in detail the reasons why he cannot truthfully either admit or deny those matters.

(c) Effect of Admission. Any actual or implied admission made by a party pursuant to such request is for the purpose of the pending proceeding only and it neither constitutes an admission by him for any other purpose nor may it be used against him in any other proceeding.

(d) Expenses on Refusal to Admit. If a party, after being served with a request to admit any matters, serves a sworn statement refusing such admission and if the party requesting the admissions thereafter proves the genuineness of any such document or the truth of any such matter of fact, the court, upon application, may order the other party to pay him the reasonable expenses incurred in making such proof, including reasonable attorney's fees, unless the court finds that there were good reasons for the refusal or that the admissions sought were of no substantial importance. Objections to a request to admit or to a refusal to admit shall be heard only on the application to assess expenses pursuant to this section (d).

(e) Withdrawal. The court may, to prevent injustice, allow the party making any such admission to withdraw it or relieve a party from any implied admission, upon such terms as may be just.

Rule 7. Failure to Comply With Orders.

If any party or an officer or managing agent of a party refuses to obey an order requiring him to answer designated questions, or to produce any document or other thing for inspection, copying or photographing or to permit it to be done, or to permit entry upon land or other property, or to submit to a physical or mental examination, the court may make such orders in regard to the refusal as are just, and among others the following:

(1) An order that the matters regarding which the questions were asked, or the character or description of the thing or land, or the contents of the paper, or the physical or mental condition of the party, or any other designated facts shall be taken to be established for the purposes of the proceeding in accordance with the claim of the party obtaining the order;

(2) An order refusing to allow the disobedient party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, or prohibiting him from introducing in evidence designated documents or things or items of testimony, or from introducing evidence of physical or mental conditions;

(3) An order striking out pleadings or parts thereof, or staying further proceedings until the order is obeyed, or dismissing the proceeding or any part thereof, or rendering a judgment by default against the disobedient party;

(4) In lieu of any of the foregoing orders or in addition thereto, an order punishing any party or agent of a party for contempt, for disobeying any of such orders except an order to submit to a physical or mental examination.

Rule 8. Application and Effect on Existing Laws.

Rules 1 through 7 shall apply to all civil actions in law and equity in all courts of record throughout the State. These Rules supersede the following statutes and rules:

(1) General Equity Rules 25 and 26 (Article 16, Sections 186 and 187 of the Code);

(2) Sections 27 and 28 of Article 16 of the Code; and

(3) Sections 104 and 106 of Article 75 of the Code.

PART THREE.
RULES APPLICABLE TO LAW ONLY.

I. PLEADING.

Rule 1. Pleas Amounting to General Issue.

It shall be no objection to any special plea that it amounts to the general issue plea.

II. JUDGMENTS BY CONFESSION.

Rule 1. Judgment by Confession.

(a) Entry. Judgment by confession may be entered by the clerk upon the filing by the plaintiff of a declaration in the usual form, accompanied by one or more written instruments authorizing the confession of judgment and entitling the plaintiff to a claim for liquidated damages and supported by an affidavit made by the plaintiff or some one on his behalf stating the amount due thereunder, and indicating the post office address (including street address if needed to effect mail delivery) of the defendant.

(b) Personal Summons. Immediately upon entering any such judgment the clerk shall issue a summons for the defendant notifying him of the entry of the judgment and requiring him to appear in the cause wherein it is entered within thirty days after the service upon him of the summons and show cause, if any he has, why the judgment should be vacated, opened, or modified. Any application made by the defendant with respect to the judgment within thirty days from the service of the summons shall be promptly heard by the court, and such action taken as the court may deem just. If the judgment is opened or set aside the case shall stand for trial in accordance with the rules of the court. If no cause is shown in pursuance of the summons, the judgment shall be deemed to be final, to the same extent as a judgment entered after trial, but may be set aside or modified on the ground of fraud or mistake.

(c) Non-resident Defendants. If the affidavit filed in the proceedings shows that the defendant is not a resident of Maryland, the clerk shall send by registered mail to such defendant at his address indicated in the affidavit a summons similar to that prescribed in section (b) and it shall be the duty of such defendant to respond to such summons within thirty days after the receipt thereof; or the plaintiff may, if he so elects, provide for the personal service of the summons upon the defendant, wherever he may be found, and file in the proceedings an affidavit showing the time and place of such service. Such personal service shall have the same effect as if the defendant had been summoned in the manner prescribed in section (b).

(d) Address Unknown. Where the affidavit filed in the proceedings indicates that the address of the defendant is unknown, no judgment shall be entered except upon order of court, and the judge shall provide for notice to the defendant through order of publication, posting of a copy of the summons at the Court House door, or otherwise.

(e) Extension of Time. The court may, for good cause shown, extend the time for responding to any summons or notice issued in pursuance of this rule.

(f) Other Cases. Except as authorized by this rule, judgments by confession shall be entered only upon order of court, after such notice and upon such terms as the court may direct.

Rule 2. Effect on Existing Laws.

Rule 1 supersedes Section 6 of Article 26 of the 1939 Code and all local court rules inconsistent with the Rule.

III. TRIALS.

Rule 1. Voluntary Dismissal.

(a) By Parties. Without an order of court a party may dismiss his claim, counter-claim or set-off as to any other party only

- (1) by filing a notice of dismissal at any time before the introduction of any evidence at the trial or hearing; or
- (2) by filing a stipulation of dismissal signed by all parties who have appeared generally in the action.

(b) By Court Order. Except as provided in (a), such voluntary dismissal shall be allowed only upon order of court and upon such terms and conditions as the court deems proper. If any party has pleaded a counter-claim or set-off before service upon him of an opponent's motion for voluntary dismissal, the dismissal shall not be allowed over such party's objection unless the counter-claim or set-off can remain pending for independent adjudication by the court.

(c) Effect. Unless otherwise specified in the notice of dismissal, stipulation, or order of court, a dismissal is without prejudice except that a notice of dismissal operates as an adjudication upon the merits when filed by a party who has previously dismissed in any court of any state or of the United States an action based on or including the same claim.

(d) Costs. Unless otherwise provided by stipulation or order of court, the party dismissing is responsible for all costs as to the action or the part dismissed. If a party, who has once dismissed a claim in any court, asserts substantially the same claim against the same defendant in another action, the court may make such order for the payment of costs in connection with the previous dismissal as it may deem proper and may stay the proceedings in the action until the party has complied with the order.

(e) Application. "Dismiss" or "dismissal" includes submission to a voluntary judgment of non-pros or non-suit or other voluntary discontinuance. This rule governs proceedings at law only.

Rule 2. Consolidation.

When actions involving a common question of law or fact or a common subject matter are pending before any court of law, or before several of the courts of law of Baltimore City, such court or any of such courts in Baltimore City may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue in the actions; it may order all the actions consolidated; and it may make such orders concerning proceedings therein as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay.

Rule 3. Juries of Less Than Twelve—Majority Verdict.

The parties may stipulate that the jury shall consist of any number less than twelve or that a verdict or a finding of a stated majority of the jurors shall be taken as the verdict or finding of the jury.

Rule 4. Directed Verdict.

In any proceeding tried by jury any party may move, at the close of the evidence offered by an opponent or at the close of all the evidence, for a directed verdict in his favor on any or all of the issues. A party who moves for a directed verdict at the close of the evidence offered by an opponent may offer evidence in the event that the motion is not granted without having reserved the right to do so and to the same extent as if the motion had not been made, but in so doing he withdraws the motion. A motion for a directed verdict shall state the grounds therefor. Instead of granting or denying the motion for a directed verdict the court may submit the case to the jury and reserve its decision on the motion until after the verdict or discharge of the jury, but for the purpose of appeal such reservation constitutes a denial of the motion, unless judgment is entered for the moving party pursuant to Rule 8. In this rule "motion" includes "prayer" and "move" includes "pray".

Rule 5. Demurrer to Evidence.

In any proceeding at law tried by the court without a jury, any party, without waiving his right to offer evidence in the event the motion is not granted, may move at the close of the evidence offered by an opponent for a dismissal on the ground that upon the facts and the law he has shown no right to relief. Unless the court otherwise specifies, such a dismissal operates as an adjudication upon the merits.

Rule 6. Instructions to the Jury.

(a) Prayers. At the close of the evidence or at such earlier time during the trial as the Court reasonably directs, any party may file with the Court written prayers that the Court instruct the jury on the law as set forth in the prayers, and shall furnish to all adverse parties copies of such prayers.

(b) Instructions. In its instructions to the jury, which may be given either orally or in writing or both, the Court, in its discretion,

- (1) may instruct the jury upon the law of the case, either by granting requested instructions or by giving instructions of its own on particular issues or on the case as a whole, or by several or all of these methods, but need not grant any requested instruction if the matter is fairly covered by instructions actually given; and

- (2) may sum up the evidence, if it instructs the jury that they are to determine for themselves the weight of the evidence and the credit to be given to the witnesses.

An oral charge need not comply with the technical rules as to prayers.

(c) Objections. Before the jury retires to consider its verdict, any party may object to any portion of any instruction given or to any omission therefrom or to the failure to give any instruction, stating distinctly the portion or omission or failure to instruct to which he objects and the specific grounds of his objection. Opportunity shall be given to make the objection out of the hearing of the jury.

(d) Appeal. Upon appeal a party, in assigning error in the instructions, shall be restricted to (1) the particular portion of the instructions given or the particular omission therefrom or the particular failure to instruct distinctly objected to before the jury retired and (2) the specific grounds of objection distinctly stated at that time; and no other errors or assignments of error in the instructions shall be considered by the Court of Appeals.

Rule 7. Special Verdicts.

(a) Use. The court in its discretion may require a jury to return only a special verdict in the form of a special written finding upon each issue of fact. In that event the court may submit to the jury written questions susceptible of categorical or other brief answer or may submit written forms of the several special findings which might properly be made under the pleadings and evidence; or it may use such other method of submitting the issues and requiring the written findings thereon as it deems most appropriate. The court shall give to the jury such explanation and instruction concerning the matter thus submitted as may be necessary to enable the jury to make its findings upon each issue. If in so doing the court omits any issue of fact raised by the pleadings or by the evidence, each party waives his right to a trial by jury of the issue so omitted unless before the jury retires he demands its submission to the jury. As to an issue omitted without such demand the court may make a finding; or, if it fails to do so, it shall be deemed to have made a finding in accord with the judgment on the special verdict. Upon the return of the special verdict of the jury, the court shall direct the entry of the appropriate judgment in accordance with this rule.

(b) Appeal. Upon appeal error may be assigned as to the submission of issues, or as to any explanation and instructions of the court, or as to any refusal of the court to submit issues upon demand, only in accordance with Rule 6, subsections (c) and (d); but any express or implied findings by the court, and the judgment directed by it may be reviewed as provided in Rule 9, subsection (c).

Rule 8. Judgment N. O. V.

(a) Motion. Whenever a motion for a directed verdict made by a party at the close of all the evidence is denied, then (1) within three days after the reception of a verdict, such party may move to have the verdict and any judgment entered thereon set aside and to have judgment entered in accordance with his motion for a directed verdict, or (2) if a verdict was not returned, such party, within three days after the jury has been discharged, may move for a judgment in accordance with his motion for a directed verdict. Whenever the court reserves decision on a motion for a directed verdict and submits the case to the jury, that operates as a motion for judgment under this rule. A motion for a new trial may be joined with a motion for judgment under this rule or a new trial may be prayed for in the alternative.

Failure to move for judgment under this rule does not affect a party's right upon appeal to assign as error the denial of his motion for a directed verdict.

(b) Disposition. If a verdict was returned, the court may allow the judgment to stand or may re-open the judgment and either order a new trial or direct the entry of judgment as if the requested verdict had been directed. If no verdict was returned, the court may direct the entry of judgment as if the requested verdict had been directed or may order a new trial. If the motion for judgment is granted, the court shall also rule upon any motion for new trial, but the new trial if granted shall be had only if the judgment so entered is reversed upon appeal.

(c) Appeal. Whenever a judgment so entered by the trial court is reversed on appeal, the Court of Appeals (1) shall remand the case for a new trial if the lower court conditionally so ordered or (2) otherwise may order a new trial or enter such judgment upon the original verdict as may be just. Whenever a judgment is reversed on appeal for refusal of a motion for judgment pursuant to subsection (a), the Court of Appeals may enter judgment as if the requested verdict had been directed or may order a new trial.

Rule 9. Trial by the Court.

(a) Judgment. When any proceeding at law is tried upon the facts by the court, the court at or after the trial shall direct such judgment to be entered as it thinks right upon the evidence and the law. The court shall dictate to the court stenographer, or prepare and file, a brief statement of the grounds for its decision and the method of determining any damages awarded. No requests for instructions and no objections or exceptions to the judgment or to the opinion of the court are required for the purpose of review.

(b) Amendment. Upon a motion for a new trial the court may open such judgment, revise it or amend it, and in its discretion may take additional testimony and direct the entry of a new judgment.

(c) Appeal. When a proceeding has been so tried by the court, an appeal from the judgment, if allowed by law, may be taken according to the practice in equity. Upon appeal the Court of Appeals may review upon both the law and the evidence, but the judgment of the trial court shall not be set aside on the evidence, unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses. The Court of Appeals may affirm, reverse, modify, or remand, as in appeals from equity.

Rule 10. Partial New Trial.

When it appears to a court of law upon a motion for a new trial that any grounds for a new trial affect only a severable part of the matters in controversy, or only some or one of the parties, the court may grant a new trial as to such part, or as to such party or parties and either enter final judgment as to the remaining parts or parties, or stay the entry of final judgment until after the new trial.

Rule 11. Effect on Existing Laws.

(a) Rule 1 supersedes all of Section 183 of Article 75 of the 1939 Code except the first clause.

(b) Rules 4 and 5 supersede Section 96 of Article 75 of the 1939 Code.

(c) Rules 6 and 9 supersede Section 10 except the first clause, and Section 11 of Article 5 of the 1939 Code.

PART FOUR.

RULES APPLICABLE TO EQUITY ONLY.

The following rules embody amendments to existing General Equity Rules. For convenience new matter inserted in the existing Rules is printed in italics and matter deleted is enclosed in brackets.

Rule 7.

All bills and petitions shall be divided into paragraphs, as indicated in the preceding rule, and be consecutively numbered, and shall contain simply a statement of the facts upon which the plaintiff asks relief, and, at his option, the facts which are intended to avoid an anticipated defense, and such averments as may be necessary, under the rules of Equity pleading, to entitle the plaintiff to relief, and the prayer for relief shall specify particularly the relief desired, and shall also contain the prayer for general relief. And if an injunction, or other writ other than the writ of subpoena, or any special order, be required, pending the suit, it shall be specially prayed for, the several subjects of the prayer being formed into distinct paragraphs, and consecutively numbered. The ordinary or formal combination clause, the allegation of the want of remedy at law, and similar formal averments, shall be omitted; nor shall it be necessary to pray that the defendants be required to answer unless it be desired that they shall answer under oath, or there be special interrogatories appended to the bill, to be answered by the defendants, or some of them, in which cases there shall be a prayer that the defendant or defendants be required to answer the bill, or the special interrogatories appended thereto under oath.

Rule 8.

The bill or petition, or a memorandum or directions to the clerk accompanying the same, [The prayer for process, or for order of publication,] shall contain the names of all the defendants named in the introductory part of the bill or petition, and the place of their residence, as far as known. [; and if] If any of said defendants are known to be infants under age, or under any other disability, such facts shall be stated in the bill or petition, so that the Court may take order thereon, as justice may require. And if an injunction, or other writ, or any special order be asked in the prayer for relief, that shall be sufficient, without repeating the same in [the] a prayer for process.

Rule 11.

Whenever a bill is filed, wherein an order of publication is not prayed, the Clerk shall issue the process of subpoena thereon, as of course and without the necessity of any prayer therefor in the bill, upon the application of the plaintiff, which subpoena shall contain the names of the parties, and be made returnable in the several counties on the first Monday of the month ensuing the date of its issue, and in Baltimore City shall be made returnable on the second Monday of the month ensuing the date of its issue, but the plaintiff may, by special direction, require any process to be made returnable at the return day next after the first return day for such process ensuing the issuance of the same. At the bottom of the subpoena shall be placed a memorandum that the defendant is required to file his answer or other defense in the Clerk's office within fifteen days after the return day. The Sheriff, or other person whose duty it may be to serve said process, shall serve the same promptly. Where there is more than one defendant, the writ of subpoena may, at the election of the plaintiff, be sued out separately for each defendant, or a joint subpoena against all the defendants may be issued. In default of answer as provided in this rule the bill may be taken pro confesso, unless the time for filing the answer be extended as provided in Rule 15.

Rule 12.

Whenever any subpoena shall be returned not served as to any defendant, the plaintiff at any time before final decree shall be entitled to other subpoenas against such defendant.

ORDER

ORDERED, this 30th day of January, 1941, by the Judges of the Court of Appeals, that the foregoing General Rules of Practice and Procedure be and the same are hereby adopted pursuant to the 18th Section of Article 4 of the Constitution of this State, and Chapter 719 of the Acts of the General Assembly of 1939.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

LAW AND EQUITY RULES.

I. DEPOSITION RULES.

At present the statutes and court rules in Maryland present a confusing variety of procedures for taking depositions, without any apparent justification or reason for the diversity. Thus, Article 35, Section 21, provides for special commissions to be issued by law courts and orphans' courts for taking depositions of non-resident or unavailable witnesses, according to the procedure in equity. In equity, special commissions are provided for in Article 16, Section 294, and in local court rules.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, under Article 35, Section 22, depositions of non-residents may be taken both at law and in equity before any notary or commissioner, without any action by the court, upon five days notice to the opposite party, or by agreement. Depositions of residents, however, are governed by separate procedures. Under Article 35, Sections 26 to 36, such depositions may be taken on notice, without action by the court, before a standing commissioner, either in pending cases or for perpetuation of testimony, but such depositions may be used only if the witness is unavailable. In addition, in equity cases, such depositions whether for a pending case or for perpetuation may be taken according to the provisions of Article 16, Section 281 to 289. Under Article 17, Section 44, depositions by agreement are provided for.

Such a diversity of methods serves no useful purpose and merely makes for complication. In addition, the exact procedure to be followed under certain of these provisions is not entirely clear, and creates further confusion.

The Deposition Rules adopted by the Court of Appeals attempt to correct this situation by providing a simple and uniform method for all depositions. The procedure prescribed is very similar to that now available under existing statutes in certain cases; it is merely clarified, simplified and made available for all situations. Depositions are to be taken upon five days notice either orally or upon interrogatories, before a notary, standing commissioner or similar officer, or by agreement (Deposition Rules 1, 3, 4, 5 and 7). This is essentially the practice now provided for non-resident depositions under Article 35, Section 22. Rule 2, which regulates depositions to perpetuate testimony, substantially embodies Article 35, Sections 29 to 31. Rule 6 gives the court extensive powers to control and restrict the taking of depositions to prevent abuse; as this is particularly important in connection with the use of depositions for discovery, it is more fully discussed under the Discovery Rules. Deposition Rules 8 to 11 regulate the conduct of the examination, the signing, certifying and filing of the deposition and the effects of errors. They follow closely the existing practice, eliminating certain ambiguities and diversities. Rule 11 governs to use of depositions as evidence at the trial and confines such use to the kinds of cases where it is now permitted. Rule 12 deals with contempt and other orders and penalties and Rule 13 regulates the application of the preceding rules.

<sup>1</sup> See e. g., Rules of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City, Equity Rules 4 to 8; Rules of the Circuit Court for Carroll County, Equity Rules 2 to 6.

In other words, a study of these Deposition Rules will reveal that while they introduce no real innovations in deposition procedure, they greatly clarify and simplify that procedure and provide a single uniform method in place of numerous different and overlapping methods.

II. DISCOVERY RULES.

A large number of the recommendations received from lawyers for changes in procedure dealt with the problem of preparing controversies for trial. Many suggested that Maryland practice could be greatly improved by providing more effective means (1) to simplify proof of matters not genuinely disputed, (2) to eliminate from the case claims or defenses raised in the pleadings which would not be seriously pressed at the trial, and (3) to inform each party of the detailed facts relied on by the other party for claim or defense. By eliminating the matters not contested and by better informing the parties on those actually in controversy, the preparation of cases for trial could be simplified, presentation at the trial improved, trials shortened, and settlements before trial facilitated.

Twenty-four years ago this same basic problem was posed by Mr. Joseph C. France in a significant address to the Maryland Bar Association on "Simplification of Maryland Pleading". After calling attention to several outmoded procedural details, he said:

"But the main problem persists: How to combine simplicity in pleadings with a fair amount of notice to the opposing party of what is not in dispute.

"For illustration: You bring suit for goods sold and delivered, and the account comprises numerous items extending over a long period. There may be no bona fide contest over deliveries and yet you can be forced to prove them. And we have all experienced the consequent inconvenience and loss of time to litigants, witnesses, counsel and courts."<sup>1</sup>

I.

PLEADINGS AS THE BASIS FOR TRIAL.

The pleadings alone are inadequate to meet this problem, because of two fundamental weaknesses:

(1) Since the allegations of claim or defense represent generalized statements of the pleader, they frequently do not indicate the type of proof by which they will be supported and will usually be left as vague as is permissible.

(2) Out of abundant caution or for other reasons the pleader may allege various claims or defenses which he has little evidence to support in order to be prepared for any contingency in the proof, and he may often deny the opponent's allegations to require proof even though no bona fide dispute exists. Inability to discover before trial the real nub of the opponent's case accentuates this tendency.

The result has been well summarized by Professor Sunderland:

"If a lawyer undertakes so to prepare his case as to meet all the possible items of proof which his adversary may bring out at the trial, or to meet all the assertions and denials which his adversary has spread upon the record, much of his effort will inevitably be misdirected and will result only in futile expense. If, on the other hand, he restricts his preparation to such matters as he thinks his adversary will be likely to rely upon, he will run the risk of being a victim of surprise."<sup>2</sup>

Mr. Walter L. Clark pointed out the consequences in an address to the Maryland Bar Association (35 Proceedings (1930), pp. 11-12):

"The inevitable results of this lack of definite information are manifold:

- "1. The trial is unduly prolonged;
- "2. The case cannot be properly prepared in advance on the law or the facts;
- "3. Sufficient prayers cannot be drafted in advance of the trial;
- "4. The element of surprise is capitalized by both sides;

"5. The unscrupulous lawyer and client occasionally gain an advantage to which the real merits of the case do not entitle them."

The marked increase in the use of bills of particulars in Maryland in recent years is clear evidence of the reality of this dilemma. Under the Code,<sup>3</sup> "either party may require a bill of particulars where the pleading is so general as not to give sufficient notice to the opposite party of the evidence to be offered in support of it." But while they provide some relief from very general pleading (particularly the common counts and general issue plea), bills of particulars do not solve the problem. Despite sympathetic administration by many of the judges, they are useful only in limited classes of cases or for particular types of information. In addition, exceptions to the demand, and to the particulars furnished impose considerable burden on the Courts and lend themselves too easily to dilatory tactics.

On the basis of his own experience Mr. France concluded:

"* * * The genius of special pleading can have no successor and, in my judgment, no substitute. Prolixity, confusion and endless amendments threaten any attempt on the part of litigants to evolve issues by their mutual statements—unless you are willing to pay the price, namely: The formalism which was at once, the life and the death of special pleading."<sup>4</sup>

This is also the conclusion of most other students and the experience elsewhere.<sup>5</sup> Consequently pre-trial procedures in addition to the pleadings are required.

MARYLAND DISCOVERY PROCEDURE.

The present procedure for discovery before trial in Maryland is, however, unsuited to accomplish these objectives effectively. Except for the narrow common law right of oyer, which permits inspection of certain specialties when pleaded,<sup>6</sup> this procedure is based entirely upon the bill for discovery in equity and is therefore subject to its historic limitations.

1. Bills for Discovery.<sup>7</sup>

Bills for discovery in equity owed their origin, over four centuries ago, to the incompetence of parties as witnesses. While this disqualification was based on a fear of perjury by a party in support of his own case, it also prevented his use as a witness by an adverse party even though his testimony was essential to the opponent's recovery. To prevent this injustice, equity permitted a party to obtain from the opponent facts and records which were (1) essential as evidence to prove the party's own case and (2) within the exclusive knowledge or possession of the opponent. In other words bills of discovery were designed primarily to obtain production of necessary evidence rather than to discover facts before trial. Bills of discovery could be combined with demands for further relief in equity or could be brought separately in aid of an action at law, either pending or contemplated.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>6</sup> These include deeds, bonds and letters testamentary and of administration. Poe, Pleading, Secs. 143, 571 and 748. Art. 75, Sec. 28, subs. 106 (1939 Code) makes proffer unnecessary but does not extend the right to other documents. State v. Wilson, 107 Md. 129 (1908).

Art. 75, Sec. 28, subs. 108 and 109 making failure to deny, in the next succeeding pleading, allegations of partnership, incorporation, execution or ownership of a motor vehicle an admission, also serves to narrow the issues.

<sup>7</sup> Throughout no attempt is made at exhaustive citation. For general discussions of bills of discovery, see Salmon v. Clagett, 3 Bland 125 (1828), Price v. Tyson, 3 Bland 392 (1831), Hill v. Pinder, 150 Md. 397 (1926). See also Miller, Equity Procedure (1897) pp. 837-841; Phelps, Juridical Equity (1894) Secs. 53, 159, 164.

<sup>8</sup> Parrott v. Chestertown Bank, 88 Md. 515 (1898); Heinz v. German American Bldg. Ass., 95 Md. 160 (1902).

The scope of such bills was limited by their origin and purpose. Aimed only at preventing inability to prove a claim because of the opponent's incompetency as a witness, discovery was denied unless the evidence sought was

- (1) material to the demandant's own case; and
- (2) essential evidence for his proof; and
- (3) not otherwise available.<sup>9</sup>

Likewise, discovery could not be obtained from a witness not a party to the main suit.<sup>10</sup> Within these conditions, discovery could be had either of facts within defendant's exclusive knowledge, through use of written interrogatories, or of books and records in his control or power. The full answer of the defendant to interrogatories, or the production of the requested documents terminated the bill for discovery.

2. Statutory Changes.

While several statutes and equity rules have simplified somewhat the procedure for obtaining discovery they have not affected either the type or extent of discovery obtainable.

At Law. To avoid the necessity of applying to equity for bills of discovery in aid of actions at law an act was passed in 1796 and amended in 1801 (Art. 75, Sec. 106 of 1939 Code). This Act authorized the court in the trial of actions at law upon interlocutory petition within specified periods

“* * * to require the parties to produce copies, certified by a justice of the peace, of all such parts of all books or writings in their possession or power as contain evidence pertinent to the issue, or to answer any bill of discovery only * * * in cases and under circumstances where they might be compelled to produce said original books or writings or answer such bill of discovery by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery * * *".

By its terms this Act merely extended to the law courts under certain conditions the same powers of discovery exercised in equity, and expressly made these powers subject to the same limitations which applied to the equitable bill for discovery. In addition it has been held not to apply to issues from the Orphans' Court<sup>11</sup> or from equity and, of course, is not available before suit as was the bill for discovery, or unless the statutory time requirements are complied with.<sup>12</sup>

In Equity. Of even less effect are the changes made by statute and by rule of court in equity discovery practice. By an act of 1798 (Art. 16, Sec. 27 of 1939 Code) courts of equity were expressly authorized to require the parties to produce such books and documents or certified copies thereof

"in their possession or power as contain evidence pertinent to the issue, or relative to the matters in dispute between the parties, to be used as evidence at the trial of such cause"

upon proof that the books or documents

"contain material and necessary evidence and that such party cannot safely proceed to the trial of his case without the benefit of such testimony".

This Act has been held to be merely an affirmation of the previous powers of equity.<sup>13</sup> Consequently, the narrow limitations on production contained in the statute emphasize the restricted scope of this procedure.

Equity Rules 25 and 26 regulate the procedure for submitting interrogatories by the plaintiff to the defendant separate from the bill and by the defendant to the plaintiff in place of a cross-bill for discovery (see Art. 16, Secs. 186-188 of 1939 Code). The scope remains unchanged.<sup>14</sup>

By an Act of 1820 (Art. 16, Sec. 215 of 1939 Code) certain provisions for enforcing discovery under the ordinary bill of discovery were also enacted.

While these provisions make discovery of facts and production of documents available in certain cases at law and somewhat facilitate the obtaining of discovery in equity, it is apparent that they make no change in the scope of discovery. Moreover, in accordance with established equitable principles, the court has held that the adoption of the statute providing for discovery at law does not deprive equity of its previous jurisdiction. Whenever the legal remedy is inapplicable or whenever the demand for discovery is combined with another recognized ground for relief in equity, the equity court will still take jurisdiction.<sup>15</sup>

3. Inadequacy of this Procedure.

With the removal of the disqualification of parties as witnesses in 1864, (Art. 35, Sec. 1 of 1939 Code), the historical reason for bills of discovery was destroyed—the opposite party could now be required to give his testimony at the trial. The continued use of such bills and of the statutory equivalents shows clearly that they had gradually come to serve an additional purpose—the need for information before trial for preparation of the case.

Despite this fundamental change in function, the same restrictions which had been applied to the original use of such bills were continued, although inappropriate to the newer purpose. Discovery in Maryland is still limited to essential evidence material to the party's own case. Carried over from its earlier history, this restriction seriously impairs its use in preparing cases for trial or in simplifying the questions in controversy. To accomplish this, the party must be permitted to "pry into the opponent's case" and to force him to make admissions of undisputed facts and to reveal the positions and evidence actually relied upon. This is the very thing the traditional limitations prevent. By removing these barriers to full disclosure many other jurisdictions have realized these benefits.

III.

ESSENTIALS FOR EFFECTIVE DISCOVERY.

More effective procedures, shown by experience to aid in narrowing the disputed questions and in simplifying preparation and proof have been developed over a period of more than fifty years in numerous jurisdictions in this country and in England. Of these, adequate discovery provisions are generally recognized as most important and most useful.

The value of adequate discovery was emphasized by the American Judicature Society in its draft Rules of Civil Procedure (1919) in the following words (page 85):

"* * * ample discovery before trial, under proper regulation, accomplishes one of the most necessary ends of modern procedure: it not only eliminates unessential issues from trials, thereby shortening trials considerably, but also requires parties to play the game with the cards on the table so that the possibility of fair settlement before trial is measurably increased."

The Discovery Rules which have been adopted by the Court of Appeals are based upon the long and successful experience with each of these methods in other jurisdictions.

This experience was summarized by George Ragland, Jr., a very capable lawyer, in 1932 after an extensive survey of discovery procedures in use in the various jurisdictions of this country, Canada and England.<sup>16</sup> In his study he not only considered the statutes and decisions but made field investigations in which he interviewed lawyers and judges as to their practical experience with the operation of each of the techniques. His findings and conclusions, which were largely incorporated into the discovery provisions of the federal rules, are in substantial agreement with earlier proposals of the American Judicature Society,<sup>17</sup> with recommendations of two committees of the Section of Judicial Administration of the American Bar Association<sup>18</sup> and of others who have studied the subject.<sup>19</sup>

Before discussing the individual Discovery Rules, and their sources, functions and effectiveness, (See IV) several basic considerations applicable to them as a group can first be briefly taken up.

Experience elsewhere shows that the full benefits from discovery can be had only by (1) broadening the scope of discovery permitted, and (2) providing more flexible methods for obtaining discovery.

1. Scope of Discovery.

If discovery is to be available not merely to assist parties in obtaining their own evidence but to protect them from surprise at the trial and to relieve them from unnecessary and useless preparation to meet evidence which will never be offered, the historic chancery restrictions must be abandoned. In other words, means must be provided, under reasonable safeguards, for ascertaining from the adverse party what evidence he proposes to bring forward in support of his claim or defense.

Many states have done just this. There both the courts and bar are practically unanimous in praise of the value of this procedure.<sup>20</sup> They agree that "it is good for both the parties to learn the truth far enough ahead of the trial, not only to enable them to prepare for trial, but also to enable them to decide whether or not it may be futile to proceed to trial".<sup>21</sup>

This view seems to be the conclusion of practically all who have studied the problem. It was strongly recommended in the 1938 Report of the American Bar Association's Committee on Pre-trial Procedure (page 38), which said:

"Either party should have full privilege to compel the opposite party to submit to oral examination, on oath, concerning all the issues in the case. Each party is entitled to know the other's case."

Similarly, Mr. France in his 1916 address already referred to (21 Proceedings, Md. Bar. Ass. (1916), 102), suggested that

"* * * under proper regulations as to time, fairness and flexibility, either litigant should have the right, in advance of the trial, to interrogate the opposing party as to his admission or denial of any material matter of claim or defense."

Likewise, in urging the adoption in Maryland of broad discovery by oral examination before trial, Mr. Clark said in his address to the Maryland Bar Association (35 Proceedings (1930), 18):

"From the standpoint of efficiency in the disposition of actual trials, the procedure requires no argument, although such an examination might prove a stumbling block to a dishonest plaintiff or defendant, or a lazy or incompetent lawyer. Such an examination, if allowed as a matter of right before an examiner, without formal application to the Court, wastes none of the Court's time but on the contrary limits the trial, shortens the cross-examination and rebuttal testimony and, I am told, disposes of many cases without trial."

When it is suggested that the scope of discovery should be thus broadened the principal objection usually offered is the danger of increasing perjury. If a party knows the details of his opponent's case, there is the risk, it is said, that he may manufacture evidence to meet it.

Experience in the states where broader discovery is permitted refutes this fear. Far from encouraging perjury, unrestricted discovery by both parties has been found in practice to prevent it. An early examination of the witness while his memory is fresh forestalls the creation of fictitious evidence and makes it easier to check discrepancies in his testimony. Since coaching of the witness by counsel before the discovery examination is less common than for the trial, the testimony is more spontaneous. Moreover, the written deposition makes it difficult to change the evidence to meet later contingencies. The mutuality of the right provides the necessary protection.<sup>22</sup> Counsel in such jurisdictions agree almost unanimously that the ability to force an opponent to give his story early in the case is an effective safeguard against perjury. The data assembled by Ragland overwhelmingly supports this conclusion. In this connection it is interesting to note that the removal of disqualification of the parties as witnesses was opposed by many for fear that it would result in a flood of perjured testimony. Today, however, although perjury is undoubtedly too frequent, no one would urge that this disqualification be re-applied.

Moreover, the Rules adopted by the Court of Appeals provide complete safeguards against any abuse of discovery. Deposition Rule 6 expressly gives the trial court the fullest possible powers to prevent any improper taking of depositions. Under that Rule any party or the deponent may apply to the Court before the deposition is taken for any order necessary to protect him from hardship or injustice or abuse. The Rule expressly authorizes the Court, for good cause shown, to forbid the taking of the deposition, to change the time, place, or method of taking it, to restrict the scope of examination, to make the taking private, to require simultaneous disclosures, or to make any other appropriate order. In addition, the Court is given the further power to impose the costs, including reasonable attorney's fees, upon a party who seeks to take depositions in order to harass or oppress another party. These plenary powers, it is obvious, give the court to fullest control to prevent any improper use or abuse of the procedure.

2. Method of Discovery.

For a completely adequate discovery procedure, effective and workable methods of discovery are vitally important.

When the scope of discovery is narrow or the material sought is formal, specific or limited, written interrogatories provide an inexpensive and satisfactory means of discovery. They should therefore be retained for use in such situations, supplemented by the demand for admissions of facts and genuineness of documents. But when more extensive information on the controversial aspects of a case is desired, written interrogatories are generally cumbersome and unsuitable. With all the interrogatories presented at one time and opportunity for careful consideration before answering, evasive replies are not difficult. As a result the number of interrogatories tends to multiply in the effort to force disclosures and prevent evasion, thereby imposing on the courts a severe burden in passing on exceptions and objections.<sup>23</sup>

An oral examination, however, avoids most of these difficulties. With questions presented singly and without time for study, answers are more direct, fruitful lines of inquiry can be immediately followed up and evasion minimized by basing subsequent questions upon prior replies. Moreover, in practice far fewer objections are made to the questions, and fuller disclosure is obtained.

The fullest advantages of the oral discovery have been achieved most simply in certain states where the ordinary deposition procedure has been adopted for discovery. In these states, statutes similar to Article 35, Section 26 (1939 Code) have been held to permit unlimited taking of depositions (without regard to probable absence of the witness) either for discovery or perpetuation, and to impose restrictions only upon their use at the trial.<sup>24</sup> By this means the necessity for lawyers to learn a new technique for discovery is avoided and, in addition, the advantages of preservation of the discovered testimony for use at the trial in case of unavailability or death of the witness are obtained at the same time. This combined discovery-deposition method has been in successful operation for many years in a number of states (such as New Hampshire, Indiana, Ohio, Texas, <sup>24</sup> In Danzer v. W. Maryland Rwy. (Baltimore Court of Common Pleas, 1931) an attempt to use Art. 35, Sec. 26, in this way was prevented by an opinion of Judge Stanton on January 16, 1932, construing the statute to restrict taking as well as use of depositions.

Kentucky, Missouri and others) and is widely used and endorsed. Because of this history of satisfactory use in the states it was substantially adopted in the Federal Rules discovery procedure.<sup>25</sup>

One objection raised to this procedure for discovery is the contention that it will put poorer litigants at a disadvantage. They will be prevented from using the procedure, it is said, because of the expense of writing up the depositions. The Rules themselves provide the complete answer to this. Deposition Rule 8 expressly authorizes the trial court to relieve a litigant from having the testimony transcribed "to save expense, or to prevent hardship or injustice". In other words, the court can allow the poorer litigant to take the deposition of his opponent without going to the expense of having the testimony transcribed. Furthermore, under Deposition Rule 6, discussed above the court can control the taking of depositions by a more wealthy opponent to prevent injustice. Consequently, the court has adequate powers to prevent any abuse by one party or the other and to put both parties on a par in the use of the procedure. As a matter of fact, this procedure has proved most beneficial in other jurisdictions for the poorer litigant with a bona fide claim, who may now be at a distinct disadvantage against an adversary with a large organization to collect evidence and interview witnesses. In practice this procedure often assists such litigants to obtain prompt and favorable settlements without the necessity of trial.

Objection may be made that extensive use of discovery by deposition will result in "trying the case twice". But this contention overlooks the practical effects of such discovery which tend to prevent this:

(1) By forcing admissions by the opponent of uncontested facts, many witnesses and much evidence can be eliminated at the trial.

(2) By forcing abandonment before trial of unfounded claims or defenses, witnesses or proof which would otherwise be kept in readiness can be dispensed with.

(3) By acquainting the parties with the strength of the opponent's case before trial settlements before trial are promoted and trial thereby avoided.<sup>26</sup>

These various benefits have in practice more than justified the broad discovery procedure. They tend to undermine the "sporting theory" of lawsuits, and to reduce the delay, uncertainty and expense of litigation and to aid in bringing about the "general change of attitude on the part of the Bar" hoped for by Mr. France, when it would be "the ethical and usual thing to admit frankly on the record all things that are not fairly in dispute."<sup>27</sup>

IV.

THE DISCOVERY RULES ADOPTED.

In the light of the preceding discussion of the fundamental bases for the discovery rules, the individual rules may now be briefly discussed to show their scope, sources and functions.

Rule 1. Discovery by Deposition.

Under this Rule depositions may be taken for discovery after suit is brought. This adopts the practice which has been successfully used for many years in Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Ohio and Texas (Ragland, Discovery, pp. 19-26) and has been recently adopted in Illinois, Arizona, Colorado and in the Federal Rules. Under the practice in the jurisdictions named and under the rule adopted, discovery by deposition may be had both from witnesses and from parties. In addition, in California and seven other western states depositions of parties and their agents may be taken for discovery.

The taking of such depositions is governed by the regular deposition procedure (Deposition Rules 1 and 3 to 12, inclusive). Under Deposition Rule 6 the court has the fullest power to control or restrict the taking of such depositions to prevent abuse or oppression. That Rule authorizes the court for good cause shown to forbid the taking of the deposition, to control the time, place, officer and method for taking the deposition and the scope of the examination, or to make any other appropriate order. In this way the parties or the person to be examined may be fully protected against improper use of the procedure.

By using the deposition procedure the creation of a new and separate discovery procedure is avoided. Moreover, the incidental preservation of testimony is frequently valuable in case of unforeseen contingencies (Ragland, pp. 241-46).

Where this method has become established, the expense of this procedure has been kept low. However, to prevent any litigant from being deprived of the proper use of the procedure because of the expense of transcribing the testimony the court is expressly authorized by Deposition Rule 8(c) to relieve the party from the necessity of having the testimony transcribed in a proper case. In this way a poor litigant can be given the same opportunity to use the procedure as a wealthier one.

The use of such depositions at the trial is, of course, governed by Deposition Rule 11, which limits it to the usual situations.

Rule 2. Interrogatories to Parties.

This Rule authorizes discovery by interrogatories to a party to any proceeding, on the pattern of the traditional equity procedure (Md. Equity Rules 25 and 26). While also now available at law by a petition for discovery under Art. 75, Sec. 106 (1939 Code), their narrow scope discourages their use. Such interrogatories have long been an established part of the practice in England (Rules O. 31, r.r. 1-11, 21 and 24, Annual Practice (1940)) and in Massachusetts and a number of other jurisdictions (Ragland, pp. 92-96).

While less efficient than oral examination for general discovery, they are an inexpensive means for some types of cases (Ragland, pp. 92-96). To overcome their weaknesses, the number permitted as of right is limited as is done in Massachusetts, and the penalty of costs is used, as in England, and the Federal Rules (Rule 37(a)), to discourage vexatious questions or exceptions and evasive answers. (See subs. (a) and (c)) Cf. Coca Cola Co. v. Dixi-Cola Lab., Inc., 30 Fed. Supp. 275 (D. Md., Chesnut, J., 1939).

Rule 3. Scope of Examination and Interrogatories.

Under this Rule, discovery by deposition or interrogatories is permitted to extend to the whole case. This is now the practice in a number of the states (Ragland, pp. 120-145) and in the Federal Courts (Rule 26(b)). As has been said above, this is recommended by the 1938 Reports of the Section of Judicial Administration of the American Bar Association (pp. 38 and 79), Dean Wigmore (Evidence (3rd Ed. 1940), Secs. 1845-1863), Ragland, Discovery Before Trial (1932), Sunderland, Discovery, 42 Yale L. J. 863 (1933); see France, 21 Proceedings, Md. Bar Ass. (1916) 102; Clark, 35 Proceedings, Md. Bar Ass. (1930) 15, 17-18. See Pike and Willis, The New Federal Deposition-Discovery Procedure, 38 Col. L. Rev. 1179 and 1436 (1938) and Federal Discovery in Operation, 7 Chicago L. Rev. 297 (1940). This extension in the permissible scope of discovery is essential to obtain the benefits of the procedure in eliminating undisputed matters, assisting preparation for trial, shortening trials and promoting settlements.

Ample powers are given to the court to prevent any possible abuse of the privilege of such discovery. As has already been said, Deposition Rule 6 allows the court to control the scope of discovery by deposition to prevent oppression or abuse. Likewise, in the case of interrogatories the court necessarily will pass on their propriety in ruling on any exceptions. In either case, of course, the court would be governed by the principles stated in this Rule 3 but would be able to prevent any improper use of the discovery power.

Rule 4. Discovery of Documents and Property.

This section provides the method for obtaining production and inspection of documents and property. It consolidates several sections of existing law (Art. 16, Sec. 27; Art. 75, Secs. 104 and 106 (1939 Code)) to provide the same method for all proceedings. The chancery rule limiting such discovery to evidence necessary to the party's own case (embodied in Art. 16, Sec. 27 and Art. 75, Sec. 106 (1939 Code)) is eliminated, however, and discovery is permitted of "evidence material to any matter involved in the proceeding". (See Notes to Rule 3.)

In addition, by use of a subpoena duces tecum, discovery of documents can be had at the deposition examination (Ragland, pp. 184-5); but such a subpoena can be issued only upon order of the court.

Rule 5. Mental and Physical Examinations.

This Rule deals with mental and physical examinations of parties upon order of the court, and embodies existing practice. The inherent power of the trial court to order a medical examination of a party whenever his condition is relevant to the action is well established in Maryland. United Railway and Electric Company vs. Cloman, 107 Md. 681 (1908); Scheffler vs. Lee, 126 Md. 373 (1915); Brown vs. Hutzler Bros. Co., 152 Md. 39

(1927). While these cases involve physical examination their reasoning appears to authorize a mental examination in a proper case. With respect to the terms of the order this section merely codifies the practice indicated by the cases cited.

Rule 6. Admission of Facts and of Genuineness of Documents.

This Rule provides a simple method for obtaining admissions of undisputed specific facts or documents and avoiding proof. Since neither party can apply to the Court for rulings on the requests or replies, (except to assess costs of proof at the trial for unjustified refusal to admit) no serious burden of administration is placed on the Courts. See Clark, 35 Proceedings, Md. Bar Ass. (1930) 13-15.

Similar rules providing for admissions of the genuineness of documents are in effect in England, some twenty of the United States (Ragland pp. 207-210) and the Federal Courts (Rule 36), and admissions of facts are provided for in England and some six states (Ragland pp. 194-207) and the Federal Courts (Rule 36).

Rule 7. Failure to Comply With Orders.

This Rule provides sanctions for refusal to make discovery when ordered, similar to those prescribed by existing law (See Art. 16, Secs. 28, 215, and 299; Art. 75, Sec. 106 (1939 Code) ).

LAW RULES.

I. PLEADING.

Pleading Rule 1, the only one of the rules affecting pleading, relates to pleas amounting to the general issue plea. Under the existing law, with certain exceptions, any plea which amounts in legal effect to the general issue plea is defective. At common law this was considered merely as a defect in form, to be attacked by a special demurrer or motion. Under our present practice, however, although the special demurrer has been abolished, pleas amounting to the general issue are held bad in substance on general demurrer.<sup>1</sup>

Pleading Rule 1 merely removes this basis for objection to a plea. It does not affect the right to plead the general issue plea. It only permits pleadings which would otherwise have been held bad because amounting to the general issue plea.

II. JUDGMENTS BY CONFESSION.

The practice with respect to the entry of judgments by confession varies widely among the several circuits of the State. In many counties judgments by confession can be entered by the Clerk without notice and upon the mere production of a note or other written instrument containing power to confess judgment, in accordance with Article 26, Section 6 (1939 Code). In some circuits, however, a judgment by confession can be entered only if supported by affidavit by the plaintiff or some one on his behalf; and in a few circuits provision is made for notice to the defendant either before the entry of the judgment or immediately thereafter.

This lack of uniformity in the procedure is itself undesirable. In addition, in the counties where no notice to the defendant is required there is dissatisfaction with the practice. This seems to be predicated largely upon two grounds:

(1) That the defendant is fairly entitled to have the plaintiff's claim supported by affidavit or other proof of the amount actually due and to have notice of the claim either before or immediately after judgment.

(2) Where a judgment is entered by confession, especially where no notice is given, courts will always entertain a motion to strike out the judgment; and in most circuits the courts adopt the practice of opening the judgment for trial even after the term upon almost any showing that the judgment ought not to have been entered. This frequently results in a trial of the case long after the facts are cold and when witnesses are no longer available.

The rule regarding judgments by confession seeks to correct this situation by prescribing a uniform procedure throughout the State. Under the rule judgment by confession may be entered under a power of attorney by filing an affidavit, stating the amount due and the post office address of the defendant. After entry of judgment notice is given to the defendant either by personal summons within the State or by delivery or by registered mail outside the State. Unless the defendant moves to strike out the judgment within thirty days after he receives such notice, the judgment becomes final. In other cases judgment by confession can be entered only upon order of court.

III. TRIAL RULES.

Since trial of a lawsuit is at best costly to the litigants and time-consuming for all concerned, it is essential that so far as possible controversies be settled by a single trial and that retrials or duplicate trials be reduced to a minimum. Yet at present in Maryland under some circumstances the same case may be retried several times and cases involving similar transactions or occurrences often require separate trials.

Thus whenever the lower court concludes after trial that it has misdirected the jury or improperly failed to direct a verdict or that the jury has ignored the instructions or has decided against the evidence, the court's only power at present is to order a new trial of the entire case. Likewise, if on appeal the Court of Appeals finds that the lower court erred in its instructions or improperly directed a verdict it must now order a new trial.

The possibility of errors in trials cannot, of course, be completely removed, but it is possible to provide various means for minimizing the likelihood of such errors, or for correcting them or segregating their effect without requiring a complete new trial of the case. A number of devices for these purposes have been developed in other jurisdictions and are in successful operation. Among these, the methods of the greatest practical value include (1) more adequate methods of instructing the jury; (2) special verdicts; (3) judgment notwithstanding the verdict; (4) partial new trials; and (5) improved procedure for trials without a jury.

Similarly, effort and time are often wasted in separate trials for cases involving the same transactions or occurrences, or by the necessity of a new trial where a plaintiff takes a voluntary non-suit during the trial. The first can be partly corrected by allowing freer consolidation of cases for trial, and the second by regulating the right to non-suit.

The Trial Rules incorporate these various devices for avoiding retrials or duplicate trials, and make several other minor changes in trial practice. The discussion which follows explains the purpose of each of these devices and their value in promoting more efficient administration of justice and saving time and expense.

RULE 1. VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL.

The plaintiff at law may now dismiss his action or submit to a voluntary judgment of non-pros at any time before argument on the facts begins and a defendant has the same right as to any claim of set-off.<sup>1</sup> Thus, after a full trial on the merits, and even after the Court has ruled on the prayers, an action or set-off may be voluntarily dismissed, leaving the party dismissing entirely free to sue again on the same facts and to subject the opposite party to the expense and inconvenience of again defending against the claim. At present, this right is absolute, and not subject to any control by the Court.<sup>2</sup>

This unrestricted right of a party to dismiss his claim and place upon his opponent the expense and inconvenience of a second trial is obviously open to abuse.<sup>3</sup> In its 1938 report, the Section of Judicial Administration of the American Bar Association said:

"It is, we believe, the very general opinion of the Bar that the practice constitutes an abuse of legal procedure in the great majority of cases and is unduly wasteful of judicial time and oppressive to defendants."<sup>4</sup>

Consequently, in a considerable number of states,<sup>5</sup> in England,<sup>6</sup> and in the Federal Courts,<sup>7</sup> this privilege has been greatly curtailed.

Under Trial Rule 1, a party may dismiss an action at law or set-off without an order of court at any time be-

<sup>1</sup> Art. 75, Sec. 183 (1939 Code); Easter v. Overlea Land Co., 128 Md. 99 (1916). Such dismissal by a plaintiff does not affect the defendant's right to proceed with any claim of set-off. fore the introduction of any evidence at the trial; thereafter a party can dismiss only by agreement of the other party or with the permission of the court. The court, in its discretion, may grant such permission and may impose conditions or terms. In this way, the court can prevent a dismissal where the party has had a fair trial with full opportunities to present his evidence, and may thus save the defendant from the unnecessary hardship and expense of a second trial. On the other hand, if the party shows that for any proper reason his case has not been fully presented, the court may allow voluntary dismissal without prejudice to another suit. Thus, the rule preserves the right in proper cases while preventing its abuse. The provision (in subsection (c) of the Rule) that two dismissals by notice are a bar is found in Alabama, Minnesota and the Federal rule. Subsection (d) regarding costs conforms to existing law. This rule should eliminate unnecessary duplication of trials and vexatious litigation.

RULE 2. CONSOLIDATION.

Where several actions, which involve common questions of law or fact, are pending at the same time, duplication of trials can often be avoided by hearing the actions or the common questions together or by consolidating the actions. Power to do this is now broad in equity<sup>1</sup> but is very limited at law.<sup>2</sup> Trial Rule 2 gives the court at law power (1) to order joint trial of common issues in several law actions or (2) to consolidate the actions. Thus, the actions may simply be tried together while leaving parties and other matters separate, or in proper cases they may be merged. This conforms to the practice which now prevails in a number of other states and in the federal courts.<sup>3</sup>

RULE 3. STIPULATED JURIES.

The constitutional guarantee of trial by jury means a jury composed of twelve men and a verdict by unanimous agreement. In the interest of greater efficiency, however, a number of states have adopted constitutional amendments reducing the number of jurors required to hear civil cases and providing for verdicts by a specified majority.<sup>4</sup> The benefits of such modifications can, of course, be obtained by agreement of parties. Rule 3 merely authorizes the parties to stipulate for smaller juries or for less than unanimous verdicts.<sup>5</sup> How far this will be used will, of course, depend entirely on the litigants themselves.

RULE 4. DIRECTED VERDICTS.

Trial Rule 4 deals with directed verdicts in jury trials and Trial Rule 5 deals with similar cases when tried before the court without a jury.

Rule 4 codifies the existing practice as to directed verdicts with two minor additions.<sup>6</sup> One requires that the grounds for the motion for directed verdict be stated for the information of the court and counsel; the second permits the court to reserve its ruling on the motion until after the verdict or disagreement of the jury. This is intended to facilitate the use by the court of judgment notwithstanding the verdict provided for in Trial Rule 8. The rights of the party requesting the directed verdict are protected by providing that any such reservation operates as a denial for the purposes of appeal.

RULE 5. DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

Rule 5 merely provides the equivalent of a directed verdict in cases tried by the court alone pursuant to Trial Rule 9.

RULE 6. INSTRUCTIONS TO THE JURY.

Trial by jury is inherently difficult to administer. Under the ordinary general verdict, it is the duty of the judge to decide the law and instruct the jury, and of the jury to find the facts and apply the instructions. This division of functions creates various pitfalls. If the court erroneously states the law, or the jury finds against the evidence, or does not apply the instructions, an unjust verdict results, and with a general verdict, the only remedy is a new trial, with its attendant expense and delay.

Since the average juror is, of course, unfamiliar with the law and inexperienced in weighing evidence, efficient operation of jury trial therefore requires that the instructions to the jury be clear and simple and that the jurors receive all possible assistance in considering the facts.<sup>1</sup>

1. Common Law Practice.

The historic jury trial at common law achieved both of these objectives in large measure: the court gave its charge to the jury orally in direct and concrete language and it also discussed and commented on the issues and the evidence.

The value and importance of this to the jury was pointed out in the seventeenth century by Sir Matthew Hale in his famous book on The History of the Common Law, in which in discussing trial by jury, he says:

“Another excellency of this trial is this; that the judge is always present, at the time of the evidence given in it. Herein he is able, in matters of law, emerging upon the evidence, to direct them; and also, in matters of fact, to give them a great light and assistance, by his weighing the evidence before them, and observing where the question and knot of the business lies; and by showing them his opinion even in matter of fact, which is a great advantage and light to laymen. And thus, as the jury assists the judge in determining the matter of fact, so the judge assists the jury in determining points of law, and also very much in investigating and enlightening the matter of fact, whereof the jury are the judges.”<sup>2</sup>

Blackstone, writing about 1765, likewise emphasizes these functions of the judge in the trial by jury:

“When the evidence is gone through on both sides, the judge, in the presence of the parties, the counsel, and all others, sums up the whole to the jury; omitting all superfluous circumstances, observing wherein the main question and principal issue lies, stating what evidence has been given to support it, with such remarks as he thinks necessary for their direction, and giving his opinion in matters of law arising upon that evidence.”<sup>3</sup>

Finally, the United States Supreme Court, construing the Federal constitutional guarantee of jury trial, has strongly stated the vital part of the judge in such trials at common law. In Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1 (1899), the Court said:

“Trial by jury * * * is a trial by a jury of twelve men, in the presence and under the superintendence of a judge empowered to instruct them on the law and to advise them on the facts, and (except on acquittal of a criminal charge) to set aside their verdict if in his opinion it is against the law or the evidence.”<sup>4</sup>

2. Maryland Practice.

Although the Maryland Constitution guarantees the right to trial by jury in civil cases according to the course of the common law of England,<sup>5</sup> yet under the present practice here, jury trials lack the basic common law features described by Hale, Blackstone and the Supreme Court. The late Governor Ritchie in an address to the Maryland State Bar Association in 1908, after referring to the use of written prayers, described the Maryland practice as follows:

"In practice, this is all. The court makes no comment whatever upon the evidence; says nothing upon its weight, however strong or weak that may be; nothing about the credibility of witnesses, however plainly it may appear that some are truthful or others untruthful; and refrains absolutely from giving the jury any benefit from the peculiar ability which the court's training and experience must give him of divining truth in the midst of improbable or inconsistent testimony.

"Unless in exceptional instances, the court does not even read to the jury the prayers it grants. Without word or comment, it silently hands them to the clerk, and if counsel do not see fit to explain them to the jury in their closing arguments then the jury see them for the first time in their jury room, and if they do not both read and understand them there, they are never the wiser for the court's instructions."<sup>6</sup>

In jury trials in Maryland, therefore, the judge has lost his historic common law powers and been reduced to a mere moderator or umpire. This radical departure from the orthodox common law practice apparently had its early origins in the distrust of the colonial judges; it came about not by statute or constitution, as in many states, but simply by usage later embodied in court decisions.

Since these decisions have been reviewed in detail in the addresses of Messrs. Albert C. Ritchie, Charles McHenry Howard, and Charles Markell,<sup>7</sup> it is sufficient to state here that they establish (1) that no comment by the court on the evidence is permitted,<sup>8</sup> and (2) that although oral instruction on the law is permissible, it has not been facilitated or encouraged.<sup>9</sup>

3. Changes Recommended.

Leaders of the Maryland Bar have repeatedly criticized this deviation from the historic jury trial. They point out that (1) the drafting of prayers has become a technical, formalized art, requiring slavish adherence to precedent and full of traps for lawyer and court alike; (2) the various technical requisites of a valid prayer combine to produce long and involved sentences in a cramped and artificial style which are practically unintelligible; (3) frequently counsel in drafting and submitting prayers are less concerned with informing the jury than with laying the basis for an appeal; (4) because of the length, number, complexity and unintelligibility of prayers, the jury probably often abandons all attempts to unravel and understand them and simply disregards the instructions; and (5) the jury in considering the evidence, receives no aid whatever from the experience and judgment of the court.<sup>10</sup>

Consequently, they have urged a return to the earlier practice. In his 1908 address, Mr. Ritchie strongly recommended this:

"It is not proposed for one instant to permit the Court to tell the jury what they must find, nor even to tell the jury what, in the Court's judgment, they ought to find, or what evidence in the Court's judgment they should adopt and what they should reject. What is proposed is this:

"At the conclusion of the case let the judge briefly and compactly sum up and recapitulate the evidence in all its bearings; let him give the jury the benefit of his advice and counsel regarding it; let him indicate to them the inferences which his own trained mind draws from it; let him show wherein it conflicts; show the bias of certain witnesses, and the disinterestedness of others; show the circumstances which should induce the jury to regard certain evidence with caution, other evidence with favor; call attention to the fact that some testimony is uncontradicted, other testimony uncorroborated. In a word, let the Court draw upon the fund of his experience, his training and his intelligence, as an aid to the jury in their deliberations, and thus use his knowledge and his faculties where they can do more good in the promotion of justice than they ever could do sealed tight in the judicial breast.

"Then let the Court follow this up with a clear statement that the comments he has just made are in no sense binding upon the jury; that the jury are after all the final judges of the facts; that they must find such verdict as to them seems proper, and if their own good judgment does not adopt the suggestions the Court has made, then it is both their right and their duty to follow their judgment, and disregard the suggestions of the Court.

"When the prayers are granted, let the Court read and explain them to the jury in the light of the outline of the case he has just given, and then when the jury finally comes to retire, who can doubt that they will go into their deliberations with minds far better equipped for the task before them than if they heard only the biased arguments of counsel, and received from the Court nothing but hypothetical instructions, the meaning of which they must decipher for themselves?

"As a result of this practice the Court would take a real part in the administration of justice. He would be the guide, the helpmate, the counsellor of the jury. Instead of giving them mere colorless instructions, to be read or not as they chose, his instructions, both read and explained, would be accompanied by practical, working suggestions and aid, and yet by impressing upon the jury their ultimate rights and duties as final arbiters of the facts, not one iota of their province would be infringed upon."<sup>11</sup>

The proposal to restore to the judge his historic functions in the trial by jury has been strongly urged before the Maryland State Bar Association on several subsequent occasions. In an address delivered to the Association in 1926, Mr. Charles McHenry Howard discussed the origins and weaknesses of our present practice as to prayers and instructions and advocated that the judge be given his former powers of oral instruction and summing up the evidence and commenting upon its weight.<sup>12</sup> Likewise in 1937, Mr. Charles Markell considered this subject, pointing out particularly the greater efficiency in jury trials in the federal courts, where the historic functions of the judge have been retained, as compared with such trials in the state courts, where the judges have been deprived of these powers.<sup>13</sup> Finally, in his President's address in 1938 Judge Robert F. Stanton took up the matter from the point of view of the trial judge and emphasized the extent to which prayers have merely become traps for the judge. In the course of his discussion he said:

"It has often been said that the only experienced lawyer in the trial who is disinterested in the outcome of the case, is the judge. He is required to know the law and is accustomed to weighing the evidence. And while under our practice he cannot comment on the facts, nor explain the law; if, in his judgment, the jury have decided improperly, either on the facts or the law, he may set aside the verdict on a motion for a new trial. It is an illogical situation to grant the power to the judge to set aside a verdict, and at the same time withhold from him the power to advise the jury from his experience, prior to their verdict, by an analysis, summary and comment on the evidence, with the instruction that his comments are merely advisory, and theirs is the power to decide in the full exercise of their discretion."<sup>14</sup>

At Judge Stanton's suggestion a special committee of the Association was appointed to "make recommendations for appropriate action to restore the trial judge to his proper role in jury trial of civil cases." In 1939 this Committee recommended the appointment of a committee to confer with the Committee on Civil Procedure of the Court of Appeals with the view to "restoration of the trial judge to his proper function in jury trials."<sup>15</sup>

Practically every competent person or group, who has studied this problem, has concluded that the restoration to the trial judge of his historic common law power to charge the jury orally is essential for efficient and just trial by jury. In 1927 a committee of distinguished professors and judges, appointed by the Commonwealth Fund to study reform of the law of evidence, reported on this question. The Committee conducted a survey of lawyers with experience both in courts where comment by the judge was not permitted and in courts where it was, to determine whether they believed comment by the judge aided trial by jury. On the basis of this survey the Committee concluded that in actual practice the privilege of comment tends to save time and expense by bringing quicker verdicts, reducing the number of disagreements, diminishing new trials and applications for new trials and fostering closer attention by the judge during the trial.<sup>16</sup> It concluded (at page 21):

"But if the greater part of lawyers who have observed the jury at work under both systems are willing to certify that the historic rule produces better results, it can hardly be opposed on the ground that comment would mislead the jury. Consequently, the reported experience of trial lawyers fortifies the theory that the return to the orthodox rule would greatly aid the administration of justice even without changes in the rules of evidence. It would strike a heavy blow against the 'sporting theory' of a lawsuit."

Likewise, the report of the Section of Judicial Administration of the American Bar Association, approved by the Assembly and House of Delegates in 1938, vigorously urged this reform. It recommended that "the trial judge shall instruct the jury orally as to the law of the case and he may advise the jury as to the facts by summarizing and analyzing the evidence and commenting upon the the weight and credibility of the evidence or upon any part of it, always leaving the final decision on the question of fact to the jury."<sup>17</sup>

Moreover, the Code of Evidence now being prepared by the American Law Institute includes provision for such summing up and comment upon the evidence.<sup>18</sup> In the discussion of this rule it is stated, "it [the right of comment by the judge] has been commended by commentators from Sir Matthew Hale to Dean John H. Wigmore. The great Thayer, after asserting the impossibility of conceiving of trial by jury in English history in a form 'which would withhold from the jury the assistance of the court in dealing with the facts,' declared that trial by jury in such a form 'is not the venerated institution which attracted the praise of Blackstone and of our ancestors, but something novel, modern, and much less to be respected'."

Among students of the law of evidence and of procedure and trial, opinion is practically unanimous in favor of the return to the common law rule. The view of Dean Wigmore is typical. In his Treatise on Evidence, he says:

"This unfortunate departure from the orthodox common law rule has done more than any other one thing to impair the general efficiency of jury trial as an instrument of justice."<sup>19</sup>

Within recent years several states, which restricted comment on the evidence by the judge, have by constitution, statute or rule returned to the orthodox rule allowing such comment. This was done by constitutional amendment in California,<sup>20</sup> by statute and rule in Michigan,<sup>21</sup> and by rule in New Mexico.<sup>22</sup>

4. Rule Adopted.

The Rule adopted restores to the judge much of his original common law power.

Subsections (a) and (b) (1) are based on existing law and practice but clarify the right to give instructions orally. Written instructions requested by the parties or prepared by the court may still be used, but the court, in its discretion, may give its instructions orally on any issue or on the whole case. While this right to instruct orally now exists, expressions in some of the cases tend to discourage its use. In this respect the Rule merely removes any special requirements or restrictions on such oral instructions.

Subsection (b) (2) allows the court in its discretion to sum up the evidence. This power is permissive only and not mandatory; the judge need not sum up unless he wishes. If he does sum up the evidence, he must inform the jury that they are to determine for themselves the weight of the evidence and the credit to be given to the witnesses. In about 24 states and in the federal courts the judges have at least the power conferred by this Rule with respect to summing up the evidence and in many of these their power is stated more broadly.

Subsections (c) and (d) require a specific objection to any instructions before the jury retires in order to raise such objections upon appeal. This merely broadens the present provision requiring special exceptions for certain classes of objections to the instructions (Art. 5, Secs. 10 and 11, 1939 Code). Thus, the judge or opposing counsel are enabled to consider the objection and make any corrections to overcome it.

Under this rule, therefore, the Judge, without encroaching on the proper province of the jury, may assist it in performing its functions. By reviewing the evidence he may call to their attention the basic questions to be decided, and by oral instructions he can explain the law applicable to the case in plain and understandable language and show how it applies to the various alternatives presented by the evidence. Both changes should make jury trial a more efficient instrument for the administration of justice.

RULE 7. SPECIAL VERDICTS.

As has already been said, one of the problems of trial by jury is the necessity of applying the law as determined by the Court to the facts as found by the jury. Under our present practice of general instructions by the Court on the law, followed by a general verdict of the jury on the whole case, the jury performs the function of applying the law as well as deciding on the facts. This method has certain marked disadvantages: (1) general instructions on the law are difficult to frame and are a prolific source of errors and reversals on appeal; (2) the duty of considering the law and applying it to the facts complicates the job of the jury in deciding on the facts; and (3) with the general verdict the effect of any error cannot be segregated but vitiates the entire verdict and requires a new trial.<sup>1</sup>

1. Nature of Special Verdict.

To free the jury from the burden of applying the law to the facts, the common law developed, as early as the thirteenth century, the special verdict, in which the jury found the facts in dispute specially and left it to the Court to apply the law to them. Originally the special verdict was a means of protecting the jury from "attaint," or punishment for finding an erroneous verdict, by shifting to the Court the responsibility for applying the law to the facts.<sup>2</sup> This common law special verdict was used in Maryland during the Colonial period.<sup>3</sup>

The common law form of special verdict has now generally fallen into disuse. Under it the jury was required to find every fact essential to establish a cause of action even though some of such facts were not in dispute. In addition, there were other highly technical distinctions as to the form of the findings. As a result the common law special verdict was difficult to administer and was itself a fruitful cause of errors.<sup>4</sup>

In more recent times, however, a modified statutory form of special verdict has been developed in some states and is in successful use. These statutes wipe out the technicalities of the common law special verdict and make the method far more flexible and simpler to administer. Such provisions have been particularly successful in North Carolina, Texas and Wisconsin over a period of more than fifty years, and the experience accumulated in these states shows that the special verdict can do much to improve the efficiency of trial by jury.<sup>5</sup> For this reason, provision for its use was included in the new Federal Rules.<sup>6</sup>

This modified special verdict was discussed in detail in an address to the Maryland State Bar Association in 1929 by Mr. John W. Staton.<sup>7</sup> After reviewing the shortcomings of the Maryland system of general instructions and general verdicts, and of the common law special verdict, Mr. Staton analyzed the experience in North Carolina, Texas and Wisconsin with the modified special verdict and showed its advantages. By specific examples he compared the complexity of the instructions used in submitting the case to the jury in Maryland with the simplicity of the questions to the jury under the modified form of special verdict in these states. Under their procedure the Court may submit to the jury specific questions as to the ultimate issues to which the jury may give a categorical answer. The Court gives such instructions as to burden of proof, the meaning of particular words or phrases in the questions or other matters as are necessary to permit proper answers. On the basis of these answers the Court applies the law to the case and orders entry of the proper judgment. In his address Mr. Staton strongly urged the adoption of the special verdict into Maryland practice.

The special verdict should not be confused with the general verdict accompanied by special interrogatories. With that, the jury returns a general verdict and also answers specific questions on particular issues.<sup>8</sup> Consequently, general instructions to the jury are still required, and the duties of the jury are increased rather than simplified as under the special verdict. The method of special interrogatories with the general verdict was tried in Maryland for a short period about forty years ago and abandoned.<sup>9</sup> While certain of the more troublesome features of this device have been improved in its more recent forms,<sup>10</sup> it seems largely unnecessary, if the special verdict is adopted.<sup>11</sup>

In certain classes of cases the present Maryland practice approximates the special verdict. Of this nature are the special issues framed in the Orphans' Courts<sup>12</sup>

<sup>10</sup> In the Maryland form, parties had an absolute right to submit interrogatories on material facts, and the right was apparently abused. See B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Cain, 81 Md. 87, 105 (1895). The more modern statutes and rules correct this by leaving the matter to the discretion of the court. See Federal Rule 49(b); Wicker, op. cit. supra, n. 8.

and in the equity courts<sup>13</sup> for submission to a jury at law. Even more similar are the issues framed in Workmen's Compensation cases upon appeal to the courts from the State Industrial Accident Commission.<sup>14</sup> Moreover, the state insolvent law<sup>15</sup> and the Declaratory Judgments Act<sup>16</sup> both provide expressly for submission of special issues to be answered by the jury. While the procedure in these various types of cases is not, of course, identical, in each category the method of special findings by the jury is substituted for the general verdict.

2. Advantages and Use.

The advantages of special verdicts are several and important: (1) The specific questions direct the attention of the jury to the controlling issues in the case. This promotes better consideration by the jury of the evidence bearing on such issues and largely eliminates the likelihood of misunderstanding. (2) Since the Court applies the law after the jury has found its answers to the questions submitted to it, general instructions on the law are eliminated, and the likelihood of error reduced. (3) If the Court errs in applying the law, the upper Court can often correct the error by applying the proper rule to the facts as found by the jury. This avoids the necessity of many new trials and permits the upper Court to enter the correct judgment instead. (4) The special findings of the jury on the issues may avoid the necessity of new trial for errors in the admission or exclusion of evidence. The findings may show clearly that the erroneous exclusion or admission of evidence was not prejudicial and that a new trial is therefore not necessary.

The rule adopted is designed to facilitate effective administration of the special verdict. It is based on the federal rule (49(a)) which was patterned on the Wisconsin, Texas and North Carolina practice. The principal features are: (1) Its use is discretionary with the Court. Thus, the Court may use either the general verdict or the special verdict, according to the nature of the particular case. This prevents unnecessary use of the special verdict for cases where it is not really required. (2) The form of submitting the issues to the jury is largely left to the trial judge. As long as the method used fairly submits the issue to the jury, neither party may properly complain. (3) The jury is required to make findings only as to the questions submitted. Before the jury retires any party may request the submission of other issues. By failing to do so, the party is deemed to waive a jury trial as to such issue and the Court is authorized to find or is deemed to have found on the issue in accord with the judgment. In this way the failure to submit issues necessary for recovery but not really in dispute cannot be assigned as error on appeal and one of the handicaps of the common law special verdict is therefore avoided.<sup>17</sup>

In the operation of the special verdict, the only serious problem is the formulation of the "issues of fact" to be submitted to the jury.<sup>18</sup> Obviously, any case may involve numerous "evidentiary" questions of fact, but to prevent the special verdict from becoming unwieldy, only the more "ultimate" issues should be submitted. The difference, however, is not hard and fast but rather one of degree. Consequently, it is undesirable to attempt to fix precise tests applicable to all classes of cases, for that will lead to technical or nice distinctions which will largely defeat the value of the special verdict. Rather the method should be kept flexible and left as far as possible to the discretion of the trial judge. Best results are obtained by keeping the number of questions small.<sup>19</sup>

The framing of proper issues should be facilitated in this state by the experience in framing issues from the Orphans' Courts,<sup>20</sup> from the equity Courts<sup>21</sup> and particularly in appeals from the State Accident Commission in workman's compensation cases.<sup>22</sup> The present practice in the latter field should prove particularly valuable in developing the necessary technique and approach in other types of cases. Moreover, once the use of the special verdict becomes familiar many of the issues can be more or less standardized. The use of the special verdict and avoidance of technicalities should be facilitated by the existing statute authorizing the court, contrary to common law, to draw all inferences from a special verdict which could have been drawn from the same facts in a trial by the court.<sup>23</sup>

If sympathetically administered the special verdict can materially improve the efficiency of trial by jury as an instrument of justice. It simplifies the functions of both judge and jury, facilitates verdicts conforming to the evidence, segregates the effects of errors, and reduces the necessity for reversals and new trials.

RULE 8. JUDGMENT N. O. V.

At present when a party moves at the close of the evidence for a directed verdict, the Court faces a dilemma if the question is doubtful. If the verdict is directed and the ruling reversed on appeal, a new trial is required; while if the lower court refuses the motion, but concludes after the verdict that the motion should have been granted, it can only grant a new trial, although the Court of Appeals could now enter the proper judgment.

To correct this, many states have authorized the lower court to enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Under this practice, after the verdict or disagreement of the jury, the party who moved for the directed verdict may renew his motion within a specified time, and the court, if convinced that judgment should have been directed, may enter judgment accordingly despite the verdict or disagreement of the jury. The opposing party may, of course, appeal from this ruling and the upper court, if it reverses on this ground, may reinstate the verdict.

This improvement, which has been used for many years in a number of states<sup>1</sup> and England,<sup>2</sup> and was incorporated in the Federal Rules,<sup>3</sup> has been strongly recommended by the American Bar Association's Section of Judicial Administration<sup>4</sup> and the American Judicature Society.<sup>5</sup>

Since it merely confers on the trial court the same power to enter judgment in such a situation, which the Court of Appeals has long exercised, the rule introduces no new principle;<sup>6</sup> but in appropriate cases it may avoid the necessity of an appeal or new trial.

RULE 9. TRIAL BY THE COURT.

In cases at law the parties may, of course, dispense with the jury and have their case tried by the court. When this is done in Maryland, however, the same procedure is followed as in a trial by jury. The court performs its own ordinary functions and separately acts as the jury: written instructions are given by the court to itself as a jury and, upon appeal, the verdict of the court on the facts has the same binding force as the verdict of a jury.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, the court in trying an equity case attempts no such division into two parts but merely decides on the law and the evidence and enters the decree it considers right, and this decision is reviewable on both the law and the facts, although weight is given to the opportunity of the trial court to observe the witnesses.<sup>2</sup>

1. Uniformity.

The source of this difference in procedure and effect in trials by the court at law and in equity is historical rather than rational. As was stated by the Section of Judicial Administration of the American Bar Association in its 1938 Report:

"The problems involved in the review of non-jury cases are essentially the same whether such cases are legal or equitable in their nature. In each type of case questions of fact are decided by the trial judge in the same way, and there is no constitutional reason why there should be any difference in regard to the conclusiveness of the decision. If questions of fact are to be reviewed on appeal in equity cases, every reason in support of such a review applies with equal force to the review of facts in law cases tried without a jury. On the other hand, if the decision of the trial court on questions of fact is to be deemed conclusive on appeal in law cases tried by the court, the same result should follow in equity cases. In other words, it is not the distinction between law and equity which should produce differences in the mode of trial or review, but the distinction between jury and non-jury determination of questions of fact. This principle has been embodied in the new Federal Rules.

"Whether the principle traditionally employed in courts of chancery, allowing a full review of the facts, produces a sounder administration of justice than the opposite principle, followed in some states, that the decision of the court is always to be given the same effect as the verdict of a jury, may perhaps be a matter open to legitimate argument. If so, it should probably be considered a local question, to be determined by each state in accordance with its conceptions of public policy.

"But whatever view may be taken regarding the advantages of allowing or denying a review of facts, nothing can be said in favor of a rule under which the review would depend on whether the case technically falls within the field of equity or the field of law.

"We recommend that findings of fact shall have the same effect on appeal in all cases tried by the court without a jury, whether they are cases at law or cases in equity."<sup>3</sup>

About twenty-five states and the Federal Courts have adopted a uniform rule for review of all non-jury cases, whether at law or in equity.<sup>4</sup> Such a rule certainly seems desirable; in view of the substantial similarity today in the manner of trial both at law and in equity, there appears to be no sound reason for different types of review.<sup>5</sup>

2. Scope of Review.

If a uniform rule for both law and equity is desirable, what is the proper scope of review?

In an address to the Maryland Bar Association in 1928 Judge Eli Frank of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City urged the adoption of the equity review in all trials by the court. After pointing out the advantages of such trials at law in saving time and in the consideration of difficult cases, Judge Frank continued:

"Under any trial system, where a case is heard before the judge alone, he necessarily decides both the law and facts. Under the practice prevailing in Maryland, he is required to instruct himself sitting as jury as to the law and having, as jury, determined the facts, to apply the law to them. His decisions upon the law are subject to review upon appeal. His determination of facts is final and subject to no review except his own, upon motion for a new trial. Occasionally judges have been accused of granting all the law asked for by the party against whom the decision is to be made and then deciding against that party on the facts. In this way, all opportunity for appeal to a higher tribunal is cut off. * * * Of course, no judge worthy of his responsible position would consciously proceed in such a manner, and yet the Bar has always experienced the fear that judges might be influenced by such an unworthy motive. On the other hand, in his effort to preserve to the defeated litigant an opportunity for appeal, a conscientious judge might often lean backward and expose the successful party to the expense and delay of an appeal, where it would be improper to do so. I am convinced that much of the unpopularity of non-jury trials is to be attributed to the considerations just discussed.

<sup>5</sup> By statute, the method of trial by oral testimony in open court is the same in equity as at law. Art. 16, Secs. 290-291 (1939 Code).

"It has been suggested that these difficulties might be obviated by establishing on behalf of the defeated party, in case of trial before the judge alone, an opportunity for review on the facts as well as on the law. This may be accomplished in several ways. An appeal to the Court of Appeals might be allowed from the action of the judge on motion for a new trial in cases tried by him alone. A better plan of procedure would, it seems to me, be to treat such cases on appeal, as equity cases are now disposed of in all appellate tribunals. In equity appeals, the Court of review passes upon the facts as well as the law. The adoption of this plan would have a two-fold effect in tending to increase the number of non-jury trials. In the first place, the apprehended danger of the nisi prius judge in effect cutting off all appeal by deciding all of the law in favor of the losing party would be removed. In the second place, the additional right of appeal on the facts which would exist only in cases of non-jury cases and never in cases tried before juries would be a powerful incentive and inducement to lawyers and clients to forego jury trials in favor of that form of procedure which would give them this additional right. An interesting by-product would be the abolition of the barbarous formula by which the judge now 'instructs himself sitting as a jury'.

"The establishment of non-jury trials has proceeded in the characteristic common law method of adapting existing methods of procedure to a new situation. The judge is expected to divide himself into two parts. In one of these he functions normally as a judge. In the second, he must operate abnormally and technically as a jury. The result is an unnatural one. He should act as the composite whole that he actually is, just as the chancellor acts in his own Court of equity, and like the decrees of the chancellor, his verdicts and judgments should be reviewable on the facts as well as on the law.”<sup>6</sup>

Between a verdict by the jury and a verdict by the court sitting as a jury, there are important differences which justify a different degree of review. Aside from the fact that the jury’s verdict represents the unanimous opinion of twelve rather than of one, their verdict is also subject to a form of review by the trial judge. On a motion for new trial, he may grant it on the ground that the verdict of the jury is against the weight of the evidence, but as a practical matter such an independent check is lacking where the judge acts as the jury. Consequently, the review on appeal may properly be broader in non-jury cases.<sup>7</sup>

In about sixteen states and in the Federal Courts, the equity form of review has been applied to all non-jury cases both at law and in equity.<sup>8</sup> In these jurisdictions, the appellate court reviews the decision of the trial court on both the law and the facts. Even in appeals from equity, however, the case is not considered completely de novo. The decision of the trial court is not disturbed unless clearly erroneous and recognition is given to its opportunity to see the witnesses and to hear the testimony. These limitations on the scope of review in equity have been clearly stated by the Court of Appeals in many cases. In Moran v. O’Brien, for example, the Court said:

“This court has on numerous occasions declared its policy to be not to reverse in equity cases findings of fact made by the chancellor, especially where the testimony was taken in open court, whereby opportunity was afforded the court to observe the appearance, demeanor and manner of testifying of the various witnesses produced, or, in other words, to obtain the atmosphere of the case, which, of course, is denied to this tribunal on appeal; unless we are convinced that such findings are clearly not warranted by the evidence contained in the record."<sup>9</sup>

Trial Rule 9 applies this standard of review customary in equity to all appeals from decisions by the court alone in jury-waived cases at law.

3. Findings by the Court.

In many of the states and in the Federal Courts, the trial court in non-jury cases is required to file special findings of fact and conclusions of law. In some jurisdictions such findings are required in all cases; in other jurisdictions, unless waived by the parties; and in still others, if requested by any party.<sup>10</sup>

The requirement of such findings has, however, been strongly criticized as carrying over into trials by the court features of jury trial which were based upon the division of functions between judge and jury. In jury trials it is, of course, essential that the judge state the law to inform the jury or that the jury state the facts in the form of a special verdict to permit the judge to apply the law. When the same person determines both law and fact, however, there is obviously no need for him to inform himself on either law or facts. Consequently, formulation of the facts and law, which is required in a jury trial, because of the division of function, is totally unnecessary in administering trial by the court alone.<sup>11</sup>

Such findings are not required under the English procedure. In a careful article considering this whole problem Professor Sunderland states:

"England and the British dominions, in administering non-jury cases at law, completely abandoned all those features of the common law trial which were based upon the division of functions between judge and jury. The English rule simply provides that 'The judge shall, at or after the trial, direct judgment to be entered as he shall think right.' [Order 36, rule 39] No formal statements are required from the judge as to the issues which he considers material or as to the principles of law which he considers controlling. He is not required, in his capacity as jury to formally make findings of facts, either general or special, to which in his capacity as judge, he applies the law which he has announced. He merely proceeds, in the informal manner of a chancery judge, to hear the case and decide it. Mr. Odgers [Pleading and Practice, Sec. 339 (11th ed.)] described the whole process in a single sentence: "In non-jury cases he [the judge] gives judgment at the conclusion of counsels' speeches, stating his reasons." Even the reasons are not required, and some of the approved forms do not contain them. Nothing need be stated by the judge beyond sufficient facts and directions to enable the clerks in the proper department to enter the correct judgment."<sup>12</sup>

On the other hand, the parties and lawyers frequently would like to know briefly at least the considerations on which the trial court decides. This is evidenced by the present rule requiring opinions by the court in equity cases in the counties.<sup>13</sup> Moreover, upon an appeal the opinion of the trial court may be useful in directing the attention of the appellate court to the questions involved in the case and the grounds on which the trial court based its decision.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>13</sup> At present, equity courts in the Counties, except Prince George's, are required to file an opinion whenever the decree or order is "passed upon argument, oral or in writing, on the part of any of the parties". Art. 16, Sec. 198 (1939 Code).

The rule adopted attempts to obtain these advantages without imposing an undue burden on the trial court. It does not require formal findings of fact or conclusions of law; it merely requires the court either to dictate to the court stenographer or to file later a brief statement of the grounds of his decision. Since the court must certainly formulate the grounds on which it acts in reaching a proper decision, the requirement that these grounds be concisely stated should not complicate or delay the proceedings. Yet the brief statement of the court's reasons will better satisfy the parties and counsel and assist the Court of Appeals in case of an appeal.

RULE 10. PARTIAL NEW TRIALS.

In some cases an error, which has occurred during the trial, may affect only a portion of the matters in controversy or only some of the parties to the litigation. Under such circumstances the Court of Appeals now has the power to order a new trial limited to the particular part of the litigation affected by the error.<sup>1</sup> The value of this power in saving time and expense in appropriate cases is apparent.<sup>2</sup> Rule 10 extends the same power to the trial court on a motion for a new trial. This avoids the present necessity of a complete new trial or an appeal.

EQUITY RULES.

The amendments made in the General Equity Rules are merely to clarify them on two points.

The changes in Rules 7, 8 and 11 make it clear that the bill or petition in equity need not contain a prayer for the writ of subpoena, which is to be issued as of course by the Clerk.

Rule 12 is amended to make it clear that additional subpoenas may be had at any time before final decree.
